Marvel Studios presents “Captain Marvel,” an all-new adventure from a previously unseen period in the history of the Marvel Cinematic Universe that introduces the MCU’s first stand-alone, female-franchise title character—Carol Danvers aka Captain Marvel.

Set in the 1990s, “Captain Marvel” sidesteps the traditional origin-story template, with Carol Danvers already possessing her superhero powers. Leaving her earthly life behind, she joins an intergalactic elite Kree military team called Starforce, led by their enigmatic commander, Yon-Rogg. But after Danvers has trained and worked with the Starforce team, and become a valued member—, she finds herself back on Earth with new questions about her past. While on Earth she quickly lands on the radar of Nick Fury, and they must work together against a formidable enemy in the form of the Skrulls—the notorious Marvel bad guys made even more dangerous by their shape-shifting abilities—and their leader, Talos, who is spearheading a Skrull invasion of Earth.

Based on the beloved Marvel comic-book series, first published in 1967, “Captain Marvel” stars Academy Award® winner Brie Larson (“Room,” “Kong: Skull Island”) as Carol Danvers/Captain Marvel, Samuel L. Jackson (Marvel Studios’ “Avengers: Age of Ultron,” “The Hateful Eight”) as Nick Fury, Ben Mendelsohn (“Rogue One: A Star Wars Story,” “Mississippi Grind”) as Talos, with Annette Bening (“American Beauty,” “20th Century Women”) as Supreme Intelligence, with Clark Gregg (“Marvel’s The Avengers,” “Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D.”) as Agent Coulson and Jude Law (“Sherlock Holmes,” “Fantastic Beasts: The Crimes of Grindelwald”) as Yon-Rogg.

The film also includes a talented supporting cast that features Djimon Hounsou (“Blood Diamond,” “Guardians of the Galaxy”) as Korath, Lee Pace (“The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey,” “Guardians of the Galaxy”) as Ronan, Lashana Lynch (“Bulletproof,” “Brotherhood”) as Maria Rambeau, Gemma Chan (“Crazy Rich Asians,” “Humans”) as Minn-Erva, Rune Temte (“Eddie the Eagle,” “The Last Kingdom”) as Bron-Char, Algenis Perez Soto (“Sugar,” “Isolated Victim”) as Att-Lass, Mckenna Grace (“Gifted,” “I, Tonya”) as Young Carol Danvers and Akira Akbar (“Grey’s Anatomy”) as Monica Rambeau.

Marvel Studios’ “Captain Marvel” is produced by Kevin Feige and directed by Anna Boden & Ryan Fleck (“Half Nelson,” “Sugar,” “Mississippi Grind”). Louis D’Esposito, Victoria Alonso, Jonathan Schwartz, Patricia Whitcher and Stan Lee are the executive producers. The story is by Nicole Perlman & Meg LeFauve and Anna Boden & Ryan Fleck & Geneva Robertson-Dworet, and the screenplay is by Anna Boden & Ryan Fleck & Geneva Robertson-Dworet.

Directors Boden and Fleck's creative team also includes director of photography Ben Davis ("Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri," Marvel Studios' "Doctor Strange"), production designer Andy Nicholson ("Gravity," "Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom"), costume designer Sanja Hays ("The Fate of the Furious," "Star Trek Beyond"), editors Elliot Graham ("Steve Jobs," "Molly's Game") and Debbie Berman (Marvel Studios' "Black Panther," "Spider-Man: Homecoming"), visual effects supervisor Christopher Townsend (Marvel Studios' "Avengers: Age of Ultron," "Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2"), special effects supervisor Dan Sudick (Marvel Studios' "Avengers: Infinity War," "Black Panther") and composer Pinar Toprak ("The Angel," "The Challenger").

Marvel Studios' "Captain Marvel" opens on March 8, 2019, in U.S. theaters.

FEMALE SUPER HERO FRANCHISE TAKES FLIGHT

With the release of "Captain Marvel," Marvel Studios launches its highly anticipated, female-led franchise into the ever-growing Marvel Cinematic Universe. Commenting on what made Captain Marvel the right choice for the newest member of the cinematic universe, producer Kevin Feige says, "We thought it was the right time to finally introduce Captain Marvel to the world. She's one of the most popular characters and one of the most powerful characters in the comics and will now be the most powerful character in the Marvel Cinematic Universe."

Continuing, he adds, "We've always had powerful female characters and heroes in our films. But having a female Super Hero franchise title character for the first time feels overdue, and it's something that we have been excited about for a long time, and we can't wait to deliver it to the world."

"Carol Danvers has always been a character fans have had a lot of love for, and she has a really unique and cool voice in the comics," adds executive producer Jonathan Schwartz. "What we wanted to do with 'Captain Marvel' was to give Carol a chance to carve out her own space in the universe and not fit her into the existing continuity or have her show up suddenly on the scene, but really give her a lot of rich, deep connection to the core of mythology of the MCU. It's exciting that we get to introduce fans to this amazing character who has such a deep and abiding fan base in the Marvel Universe."

With many years of source material in the comics, the filmmakers were drawn to a run of comics by Kelly Sue DeConnick, whose take on the character would be the general inspiration for the film. Executive producer Jonathan Schwartz explains why that particular run of the comics was a great jumping-off point in developing the story and screenplay.

"Much like the Abnett and Lanning comics formed the foundation of the 'Guardians of the Galaxy' films, from the standpoint of character and voice, we decided to go back to writer Kelly Sue DeConnick's run on 'Captain Marvel,'" explains Schwartz. "That run dealt with Carol Danvers in a great way and really made her a fully realized character for the modern era in which she finally assumed the mantle of Captain Marvel. There was a voice and tone for that character that felt very cinematic, and we were really excited to dig into and bring to life on the big screen. There were also a few other aspects that we were excited for in that run. One of them being that she gets to be the bridge between the cosmic side of the universe and the earthbound side of the universe."

Comic-book writer Kelly Sue DeConnick explains the inspiration for her take on the character in her run of “Captain Marvel” comics. “My dad was in the Air Force, and I grew up on the base,” says DeConnick. “When I pitched Marvel to write a run of comics, I basically said my inspiration was Captain Marvel or Carol Danvers as Chuck Yeager. For me, it was about the metaphor of flight and really kind of exploring that and escaping the bounds of our fears and our doubts about ourselves. That was thematically a lot of what I wanted to inject into the character.”

For the comic-book writer, the news that Captain Marvel was going to the big screen was music to her ears. “When they first announced this movie,” says DeConnick, “I knew it would be a huge step forward and would be important in the cultural zeitgeist. The message that it sends to little girls and women of all ages is something that renders me inarticulate, truly.”

DeConnick adds, “For me, and hopefully many others who will see the film, she will not just be a female superhero; she will be looked upon as simply a superhero.”

Part of what made Marvel filmmakers excited about “Captain Marvel” was how “Black Panther” took on serious themes and issues about being black. Similarly, “Captain Marvel” deals directly with feminism and equality. As Jonathan Schwartz explains, “We were all really excited about finding the story and having it infused not only with fun sci-fi action and adventure, but with very real issues like female empowerment and equality, which is one of the key themes of the film.”

Filmmakers decided to set Carol Danvers’ story in the 1990s—a first for the MCU. In this pre-Avengers time period, cell phones were just phones, pagers were in, internet cafes were the rage and video rental stores dotted the landscape.

“We were really intrigued with the idea early on to explore a time in the MCU that we hadn’t seen before in the ’90s,” says Feige. “It also allowed us to tap into ’90s nostalgia, which, having grown up and been through college and graduated college in the ’90s, makes me feel old. And now there’s this nostalgia for everything ’90s, and it felt that it would be fun to also tap into that period stylistically and cinematically with the ’90s action films.”

The next order of business for filmmakers was finding the actor to step into role of the Marvel Cinematic Universe’s most powerful force, Captain Marvel. And they found that actor in Academy Award® winner Brie Larson. “When we found out that Brie Larson might be interested in joining the MCU, we had numerous meetings and pitched her the idea for the film,” recalls Feige. “She was a huge fan of the character in the comic, and one of the highlights of my career at Marvel was introducing her at Comic-Con and having her come out on stage and stand with literally almost every other actor from the MCU. She was at the forefront, which was a great foreshadowing for how audiences are going to embrace Brie as this character.”

Feige adds about the character, “The great thing with Captain Marvel is that she is human. There’s a real person in Carol Danvers who gets these incredible powers and has these amazing adventures in outer space. But, as with all the best Marvel characters, she needs to be very human. So, this is not just about somebody who is incredibly powerful and can fly around and shoot photon blasts out of her arms. It’s somebody who’s very human, who’s very vulnerable, and who has multiple dimensions.”

“Brie was the only choice for Captain Marvel,” says Jonathan Schwartz. “In the very early stages as we were conceiving the character, we very quickly thought of her, because the character was going to be a combination of emotion and vulnerability, strength and power. We saw all those things in Brie from a very early stage. When you go back through Brie's body of work, you see someone who is an incredible actor and capable of conveying a great range of emotion, but is strong in the way you want Carol to be strong."

Brie Larson recalls those initial meetings about the role and film: "When I met with Kevin [Feige], Victoria [Alonso], Lou [D'Esposito] and Jonathan [Schwartz], they showed me some images and they started talking about the legacy of this character. They were interested in exploring the complexity of being female, exploring emotion mixed with honor, which I felt were two things that are really important parallels that coincide within Captain Marvel. This desire for perfection combined with the leniency of having an open heart, and how there's messiness between those two things. Coming out of the meeting, I quickly realized that this could be the biggest platform I could ever imagine from which to tell this story about the human condition, and walking out I just knew we could deliver something great."

For Larson, being the lead of the first female Super Hero franchise presented an opportunity to put herself in the forefront of breaking new ground in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. "It's such an honor to be part of the Marvel Cinematic Universe, and be part of this legacy of characters and storytelling that is so incredibly meaningful to people," says Larson. "These films are part of what's shaping our culture, who we are, what morals we value. I don't think that I fully understood the scope of what it meant in the cultural zeitgeist until the announcement came out that I was going to be playing Captain Marvel. I've slowly started to grasp the vastness and gravity of it all."

THE DIRECTING TEAM COMES ABOARD

Following Marvel Studios' long history of choosing character-driven directors, the filmmakers brought on the directing team of Anna Boden & Ryan Fleck, who had carved out critical success in the indie film world. Feige remarks, "We always love to look outside the box for filmmakers. And for us it's not really outside the box. It's just finding talented people who might not have done movies on this scale or of this size before, but who've done incredibly clever and unique and special films. Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck have done just that. They've done a number of films that impressed us, and they have a very firm, guiding hand and vision of storytelling."

Feige adds, "We met with them three or four times, and they just understood Carol. They understood her story and the wish fulfillment of Carol's journey of becoming a superhero. They did a lot of work on this character, and it is very special."

Explaining what sparked the directing duo's interest, Boden says, "One of the things that drew us to the character was the fact that she was a really powerful, interesting, unique and independent female character. We are so excited to be telling this story about somebody who's not just powerful but also really complicated and human."

"In researching the project, we started digging into the comics, and we just fell in love with the character, her voice, her grit and her humor," adds Ryan Fleck. "We were trying to figure out how to do this, because we come from a very indie background, but we were aware that Marvel had been making some bold hiring decisions before us with Taika Waititi directing 'Thor: Ragnarok' and Ryan Coogler directing 'Black Panther.' Both are great filmmakers who come from indie filmmaking and very character-based storytelling. When we saw they were hiring directors like that, our interest was really stirred because they're not just after the big spectacle or the big explosion."

In stepping up to direct "Captain Marvel," Anna Boden also became the first female director in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. Sharing her thoughts on taking the helm of one of Marvel's most iconic characters, Boden says, "I feel incredibly honored to be given the opportunity to be here with this awesome group of people. One of the things I love about this movie is what an amazing collaboration it is between women."

For Boden, diving into the complex character of Carol Danvers aka Captain Marvel with Brie Larson in the role was a welcome prospect. "Having Brie Larson in this role is so important because she is such a strong, dynamic and complex person and woman. She brings so much of that to her work and this character. I was so excited at the prospect of creating and developing a character who was just about as dynamic as any character we've ever written in any of our movies. It's thrilling for me to go on that journey with her and create a Captain Marvel character who's very specific and unique. She isn't an everywoman, but she does kind of capture something about what it means to be a woman and what it means to be a powerful woman and ultimately what it means to be human."

Brie Larson, who also got her start in the world of indie films, felt the script was a big win for her and the film. "Anna and Ryan and the other writers worked so hard and diligently on the script and crafting out this structure and story, which made my immersion into the character much more seamless," says Larson. "Anna and Ryan come from the same scrappy indie-film world and were able to easily understand where we were coming from. So, to be with the both of them on a project like this feels super surreal."

Describing the direction in which he and Boden wanted to take the story and the Captain Marvel character, Ryan Fleck says, "We really wanted to explore the life she has and the humanity that grounds her, as that element excited all of us. We felt like we could tell a story that was really about a character journey of reconnecting with her own humanity."

Continuing, he says, "It's also why Kevin [Feige] and Jonathan [Schwartz] and everybody at Marvel were so excited about Brie Larson in the role, because she brings such humanity and strength to this character without being a perfect idealized superhero. Her strength comes with all that swirling human emotion, and that layers a lot of depth to the character."

Boden adds, "We spent a lot of time in a dark room reading by ourselves and learning about this Carol Danvers. We really sparked to the Kelly Sue DeConnick iteration of the character when she took on the mantle of Captain Marvel. It was also very much what Kevin Feige and Jonathan Schwartz were talking about in terms of the character that they were excited to dig into. The character is flawed in certain ways and wildly human even though she is a superhero. She has a sense of humor as well as real grit. She's sometimes a little bit cocky and sometimes a little bit irrational and doesn't make the best decisions for herself."

For Kevin Feige, watching the directors deliver on every level was a great validation of Marvel Studios' instinct in choosing directors for its films. "Anna and Ryan brought a very unique vision to this story and this hero, who has very human origins and yet arises over the course of the film to become one of the most powerful characters we've ever introduced," comments Feige. "They were up to every challenge and elevated the material and film."

THE CAST OF CHARACTERS

CAROL DANVERS/CAPTAIN MARVEL

(Brie Larson)

A former officer and Air Force test pilot, Carol Danvers becomes the universe's most powerful hero when Earth is caught in the middle of a galactic war between two alien races, the Kree and the Skrulls. Danvers is a maverick and not easily controlled, but through her journey she finds her true self and the path to harness her incredible powers.

In taking on the role of Carol Danvers, Brie Larson quickly found herself immersed in the vast universe of source material from the comics. "I wanted to know everything," says Larson. "So, I read everything I possibly could. I had an app on my iPad that's basically every Marvel comic that's ever been created. I just spent hours upon hours going through it and reading everything. There are different illustrators in the comic books, who all have their own take on her. There's a lot of material for me to work with to create something that can still feel personal to me and can still feel like it's mine. It is smartly crafted, and Carol is incredibly dynamic, which leaves a lot of room to play."

Speaking to what attracted her to the role, Larson says, "This is the most range of a character that I've ever gotten to play before, and it's really cool that it's in something like this. I've never had so much time with a character that has so many different varying levels, which I think was one of the aspects I was attracted to, because in the process you learn a lot about yourself."

She adds, "The thing that I found so unique in Carol, from reading the comics and from the script and learning more about her, was her sense of humor mixed with hyper-intelligence and total capability in whatever challenge comes her way. I realized after going to the Air Force base that the Air Force pilots are like that, too. So, the spirit of her or the core of her is the Air Force."

Commenting on how "Captain Marvel" may make a positive impact on kids, especially girls and young women, Larson says, "Once you know what Captain Marvel inspires within the film, it changes the entire perspective of the rest of the catalogue in this very profound way. It's powerful stuff. Part of what made me feel the stir to do this was when Kevin Feige told me that his daughter hadn't seen any of the Marvel movies and that this would be the first one that she sees. That put things in perspective for me of understanding the potential of what this was and the timing of it."

In the film, Carol Danvers is an Air Force test pilot who, over the course of a very strange adventure, gets amazing superpowers. She is training with Starforce, an elite division of the alien Kree army. As Carol begins her journey in Starforce she begins to realize her true strength level as well as glimpses into her mysterious past.

Describing Carol Danvers, Larson says, "The thing about Carol is that she's two halves. She's Kree and she's human. And the Kree are really incredible warriors, hyper-intellectuals and the best at what they do. Then there's this other part of her that's human, and that is the loving part of her, but it's also the part that makes her kind of sassy and a little brash at times. It makes her really emotional. It makes her aggressive and competitive. It's all of the good and all of the bad in that human side. It's the flaw, and it's the best thing about her."

Larson adds, "I think she's incredibly relatable in that way because we both have two sides of our brains. We have the left and the right brain. We have the logical, and we have the emotional, and we have the war between the two of them. Which one is of most value? And which one we should bring to the table? So, that internal struggle is what keeps playing Carol so interesting for me, because I'm basically playing two characters at once. And that will keep the movie constantly surprising."

"We're tackling this origin story from a little bit of a different way, because Carol Danvers' story sets up the entire MCU, as this film is a pre-Iron Man universe that we're exploring," comments director Ryan Fleck. "It's not meeting her as a human and following a linear trajectory to her becoming a superhero. Carol is trying to figure out how she got from being this human jet pilot to becoming a powerful alien warrior who can shoot photon blasts from her hands."

NICK FURY (Samuel L. Jackson)

In the years following the Cold War, Nick Fury wrestles with his sense of purpose within S.H.I.E.L.D. When Fury crosses paths with Carol Danvers, they become Earth's only hope of stopping a Skrull invasion.

Returning as Nick Fury is Samuel L. Jackson, in his largest role to date in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. With the film set in the 1990s, Nick Fury is at the very infancy of his career as an agent within the government. "Part of the challenge for this particular film is I have two eyes and hair," laughs Jackson. "Since the film takes place over 20 years ago, I had to forget who Nick Fury is at this present-day juncture in the MCU, because he hadn't formed his opinions yet. He's essentially a bureaucrat in one of those government alphabet things. He's still a badass, but he kind of takes orders and listens to the people above him. He still has a light side that we don't see a lot of in those other movies. He has this weird, funny, ordinary-person sense of humor."

Jackson continues, "He's also one of those people who does not believe in extraterrestrials until he meets one, and only then does he realize that he needs to find some people that can do extraordinary things, because the threat's not just coming from the east or the west on this planet. It's coming from out in space."

Describing Nick Fury's role in the "Captain Marvel" story, Jonathan Schwartz says, "Sam Jackson is back to play a younger version of the character. He hasn't lost that eye yet and doesn't need an eye patch. He is a different Nick Fury who thinks his entire career as a spy within S.H.I.E.L.D. was about the Cold War and these earthbound situations that he's been dealing with. Then there's an event that occurs and signifies the arrival of Captain Marvel back onto Earth, which thrusts him into a new adventure and leads him on the path to become the Nick Fury we know and have seen in all the other movies. But at this point he's never seen an alien, and we get to see his first encounter with cosmic events and supernatural events.”

Commenting on Fury’s relationship with Carol Danvers, Jackson offers, “There is a real buddy-cop element to ‘Captain Marvel’ with Nick Fury and Carol. When they meet, they are kind of in an adversarial position. They don’t have to have a knock-down-drag-out fight to become buddies, but they must come to a place where he understands something about her, and she understands something about him. And there’s a level of trust in that belief of who each person is and helping that person discover something. She helps him discover things about himself, and he helps her discover things about herself. And in doing so, they bond in an interesting way.”

Jackson adds, “Nick understands that Carol has a level of humanity that she’s lost touch with. There’s a literal discovery of self in this movie, and not just finding that thing inside you that makes you go, huh! I mean she literally doesn’t know who she is. And Nick helps her discover who she is. In doing so, he begins to understand that there is a way to find people who have extraordinary abilities that aren’t a threat and who will be helpful. He needs this understanding in order to go on to create the Avengers Initiative.”

For Larson, teaming up with co-star Jackson twice before brought a sense of familiarity for her debut in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. “Sam’s my family,” says Larson. “We are the dynamic duo that the world didn’t know that they needed. This is our third film together, and we just love each other and have the best time together. I can talk to him about anything. And he’s just a master-class actor. He’s just the greatest, and I was so thrilled when I found out that he was going to be right by my side on this one.”

“What Brie brings to this film is a level of respect from the audience that I’m talking about,” says Sam Jackson. “She’s done a very serious movie and won an Oscar®. She’s done comedies that people loved and laughed at. She’s also been in an adventure story that I happened to be in with her where we’re running from a big, hairy monster. But she also has this real-life thing of championing women’s rights that’s very genuine and a great lead to follow for young women in general. For her to become a person with superpowers is an amazing thing, and it’s going to resonate with women of all ages. We have done three films together and I love coming to work with her. We laugh a lot, but when she hits the set, the games become serious.”

TALOS (Ben Mendelsohn)

A proud member of the Skrulls, Talos is a master of shape-shifting. An integral leader of the Skrulls’ offensive efforts in the bitter Kree-Skrull War, the fearsome Talos will do whatever it takes to win.

While Carol Danvers is Nick Fury’s first encounter with super-beings, she reveals a much larger problem for Nick Fury in the form of the alien Skrulls, who are led by Talos, played by Ben Mendelsohn. “As far as I’m concerned, the Skrulls are like the heavy metal rock stars of Marvel,” informs Mendelsohn. “They’re kind of like the AC/DC of the alien world. They’re three chords. They’re direct. They rock, but they’re not noise pollution. The fans have been waiting to see them for a long time. The Skrulls, who are basically these tough, lizard-like kind of space pigs, are big and tough and have the ability to do something that makes them very formidable indeed.”

Director Anna Boden explains the Skrulls’ unique talent that allows them to infiltrate and take over. “Skrulls are these really cool aliens who can shape-shift,” says Boden. “They’re like the best spies in the world because they can just instantly become part of a culture, and you can’t tell that the person you speak to is a Skrull. In the development of the film, we got really excited about the idea of an enemy who could literally be anybody. They could look like your mother, your best friend, the security guard standing over there. It creates this sense of paranoia.”

“We did a lot of research on shape-shifting in movies,” adds Ryan Fleck. “There have been some good and not-so-good versions of it. But we wanted to give the sense that there was something organic shifting with the skin, something bubbling under the surface. We didn’t just want it to feel like a flicker effect or a morph or something that we’ve seen before. We really wanted to feel like there’s some movement involved that takes a little bit of effort. We worked with Ben Mendelsohn on it, and we settled on a very cool process.”

While the Skrulls are virtually undetectable once they have shape-shifted, the ability does have one flaw as Ben Mendelsohn describes, “Skrulls can get into your mind and simulate their host, but they are limited as to what they can access. But Talos is not your average Skrull, and as their leader, he is the best shape-shifter in the universe and is a formidable adversary for Carol Danvers and Starforce.”

“We’ve talked about the Skrulls since the very earliest days at Marvel Studios,” says Kevin Feige. “They might be the most famous alien race in the Marvel comics. It had always been about figuring out when and where to introduce them. This Captain Marvel story was the right one to bring them into the fold and to introduce the overarching narrative of the Kree-Skrull War, which is one of the most important and groundbreaking storylines within the Marvel comics and now will be the backdrop to the adventures of Captain Marvel.”

And what does Mendelsohn think about bringing the Skrulls to the big screen? “It’s pretty good to be bringing them to show to the lesser beings, like the humans and the Kree and all these other galaxy fools. Skrulling is good. That’s the thing about being a Skrull. Skrulling—it feels so good, feels so right,” laughs Mendelsohn.

YON-ROGG (Jude Law)

Yon-Rogg, the Starforce Commander, is a highly regarded warrior in the Kree army, which is in a perpetual war with the Skrulls. An imposing leader and Carol Danvers’ mentor, the commander of the elite army unit is a hero among the Kree people.

For centuries the Skrulls have been warring with another alien race, the Kree, and Jude Law stepped up to play the Kree Starforce commander, Yon-Rogg. For Law, it was a part he had been secretly waiting for. “Before this film, it kind of felt like a party you’ve heard about for years, and you know and admire all the people who go, and then you suddenly realize that you haven’t had an invitation yet,” says Law. “So, to get an invitation is a good feeling, and I’d been a fan for a long time, and being able to step into and be part of the things that I admire and love is a thrill.”

Preparing for the role required Law to get up to speed on the “Captain Marvel” characters. “I wanted a quick education in the characters. So, they sent me some stuff, which I read. Then I relied on the script and treated it just as I would any other piece of writing. But here’s an interesting story. Captain Marvel was my father’s favorite character when he was young. So, he could tell me all about it, from the male iteration into the female iteration. And he knew exactly who my character was.”

Law adds, “The themes of the stories and conflicts that are laid there in the comic books are timely and social. They feel relevant. They feel political in ways. They’re stories of empowerment, of introspection, of learning to confront your ills and your dark sides. It’s why they’re so popular, I think.”

Speaking of the relationship between Carol Danvers and his character, Law says, “Yon-Rogg is a mentor to Carol Danvers. She has been a sort of pet project for him. He feels responsible for guiding and containing her skill sets, honing her abilities and trying to keep her mind from drifting into the more human, emotional places, and becoming therefore more focused and driven and slightly less emotional, which is rather more Kree.”

For Law, the opportunity to work on practically built sets on location was an added plus. “In certain areas they constructed the whole set, but what’s been great are the locations. You put this kind of hardware and the suits in a lakebed at the right time of day, lit by the brilliant Ben Davis, and it looks like you’re in an alien world. It’s kind of breathtaking. We’ve been to some interesting locations. There’s also just a sense of excitement when you’re making a movie outside. There’s just a dynamic and a scale to it all that suddenly enhances everything. It gives you literally a sense of terra firma.”

“I could talk about Jude Law all day,” praises Jonathan Schwartz. “He’s a terrific actor, and he was really passionate about this role and wanted to understand his character from a fundamental level. He relished playing a character that is very complex and layered. His relationship with Carol has many sides to it, and I’m excited for fans to see this Jude Law performance.”

MARIA RAMBEAU (Lashana Lynch)

A former test fighter pilot and Carol Danvers’ best friend, Maria is strong-minded and a loyal confidant in Carol’s life.

While Carol struggles with figuring out her past in the film, a big part of it is Maria Rambeau, who has been her best friend since their days as test pilots in the Air Force. Lashana Lynch, who makes her American feature film debut playing Maria, describes the special friendship Maria has with Carol, saying, “It’s beautiful to see the female relationship that we have—the closeness, the sisterhood, the love—and the fact that it has been them against the world.”

About her character, she adds, “Maria Rambeau is a very competent former female test pilot. She is someone who was capable of doing many things in her occupation but didn’t necessarily get to fly, being from a male-oriented environment. Carol and Maria became best friends when they were assigned to the same Air Force base and were literally stuck together like glue. And wherever they moved around the world, as you do when you’re in the military, Carol was there, being Maria’s backbone.”

Lynch was thrilled to come into a project that was breaking ground in the MCU. “I’ve been a big fan for a very long time. I watched all the movies with my friends, and I’ve been aiming to be a part of the MCU for at least two years now,” says Lynch. “I was really excited that Marvel was focusing on their first female Super Hero franchise. To be a part of this project in particular was exciting, because I knew that they were giving Captain Marvel, who is the most powerful Avenger in all the universe, her chance in the limelight and her chance to tell her story from the very beginning so you get to see how everything started.”

“Lashana’s an amazing actress, and we’re very lucky that she agreed to do this, because Maria is Carol’s heart and soul in many ways,” says Kevin Feige. “Maria is Carol’s link to her humanity and link to Earth. And over the course of this story, she is the force that begins to teach and help Carol rediscover where she came from before she was this Kree Starforce soldier.”

AGENT COULSON

(Clark Gregg)

Agent Coulson is a new rookie agent at S.H.I.E.L.D. When unforeseen circumstances arise, he finds himself thrust into action and must prove himself.

With the filmmakers rolling the clock back to the 1990s, they were able to revisit one of the MCU’s favorite characters, Agent Coulson, who in the film is just beginning his work with S.H.I.E.L.D. and meeting Nick Fury for the first time. “It was intriguing to go back to the ’90s and play a different angle of Coulson’s relationship with Nick Fury,” says Clark Gregg, who is reprising his role. “It is essentially an origin story for both characters, and you get to see where they came from and how their relationship was formed.”

“To a certain extent, I may be the expert in Phil Coulson,” laughs Gregg. “But I have to say one of the really fun parts about it is that there’s always been a certain kind of license to let me play a little bit generously because the character and the dynamic was borne out of Robert Downey Jr.’s improvisatory style. But everybody adds a little piece along the way. Part of the fun of the journey for me is to see where other people take Coulson.”

SUPREME INTELLIGENCE

(Annette Bening)

The Supreme Intelligence is the spiritual leader of the Kree people. It is a collective artificial intelligence of the greatest minds of the Kree preserved over millennia.

When two-time Golden Globe® winner and four-time Academy Award® nominee Annette Bening joined the cast to play the Supreme Intelligence, the MCU was something she was not familiar with, but luckily she didn’t have to go far to get all the information she needed to come on board the project. “I’m not a comic-book person, but everybody around me is,” says Bening. “My husband and a couple of my kids are big comic-book readers and fans of the MCU. They were my resource. So, when I first came on, I had them explain it all to me.”

She adds, “What’s fun about this story is that the storytellers are taking the premises and characters of the Marvel comics that have been established and subverting them. That is why I had to really have a sort of crash course, so I could understand the character and what I was doing in the bigger overall picture. But once I understood it all I was like wow, how cool and fun this project is.”

Bening learned that the Kree are led by a god-like being called the Supreme Intelligence, an amalgamation of all the dead who have their consciousness uploaded to it, and as Bening explains, “All Kree warriors have to go into a virtual chamber and commune with the S.I. to prepare for battle.”

Describing what drew her to the project, Bening says, “We have this fabulous female character, Carol Danvers, who goes through the hero’s journey from trying to figure out who she is to owning her own power. That’s kind of the classic hero’s journey. So, that’s fun, especially because we go back to the ’90s. So, the references and the music and the technology and all of the world that we’re in seems like another time. Of course, to some of us it’s not another time. It’s just real life. But that’s really cool.”

“Even though you’re in the Marvel Cinematic Universe, it’s still about people,” adds Bening. “It’s about real human feelings and growth and challenge and change and adversity. And despite adversity, there’s a place that we can get to like Captain Marvel does, where she realizes that her own power is really just in discovering her own true authentic self.”

She continues, “The way that they’re approaching the casting of these characters makes them memorable. There’s a part of us that wants to get back in touch with that sense of fun and adventure, no matter how old we are. We’re reassured that the universe is a complicated place but there’s humor in it and, in the end, there’s a meaning to it.”

“Annette was perfect casting,” exalts Jude Law. “When you first see her with Brie, you think she must be her mom. There’s a wonderful symmetry to Brie and Annette. They’ve got a very similar energy. Annette is another brilliant member of the cast and just wonderful to be around.”

THE STARFORCE TEAM

In the film, Carol Danvers has become part of Starforce, the Kree’s elite military operatives. The Starforce team includes a diverse set of characters, including Korath, played by Djimon Hounsou, a stoic and disciplined textbook Kree and second in command for Starforce; Bron-Char, played by Rune Temte, an imposingly large presence who is the team’s muscle; Minn-Erva, played by Gemma Chan, a cool, expert female sniper; and Att-Lass, a stealth infiltration specialist played by Algenis Perez Soto.

“When we meet Carol Danvers in the beginning of the film, she’s on the Kree home planet of Hala,” explains Kevin Feige. “She is a member of the Kree Starforce, which is basically like the Navy SEALs or the Blue Angels. They are the best of the best. So, in casting the team we wanted to put a team together that was very diverse.”

With the film being period to the 1990s, Djimon Hounsou was able to reprise his role after being last seen as Korath in Marvel Studios’ “Guardians of the Galaxy.” “It feels great to be back in the Marvel Cinematic Universe,” says Hounsou. “It’s great to be able to recreate some of the backstory in a way that my existence in ‘Captain Marvel’ is recounting where Korath came from before ‘Guardians of the Galaxy.’ We get to have a hint of him younger and more dynamic.”

Rune Temte, commenting on the Nordic look of his character, Bron-Char, says, “I was pleased with the character’s look as it brings out the Nordic features I have. Bron-Char is raw, rugged and real, and no one will think he is beautiful. He is the guy who has to be the strong-arm of the group and the enforcer.”

As rough around the edges as Bron-Char is, Minn-Erva is his polar opposite. Calculated, strategic and always on the top of her game, she is the only female member of Starforce until Carol comes along. “Minn-Erva is pretty badass,” explains Gemma Chan. “She is the Starforce team’s star sniper. She has blue skin and hair and, until Carol comes onto the team, she was the star and she was the commander’s favorite. So, there’s a little bit of an undercurrent of playful rivalry with Carol as she is coming up the ranks.”

Re-teaming with Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck is Algenis Perez Soto, who starred in one of the directors’ previous films. Describing his character, Soto says, “In Starforce, everybody has their special skills. Att-Lass is very sleek and fast.” He adds about working with Brie Larson, “When we were not filming, I was able to spend some time with Brie and talk about various things. She’s really cool and made it easy for me to build their dynamic in the film.”

Rounding out the cast in the film are Lee Pace as Ronan, the highly capable Kree leader who leads the fearsome Accusers and was last seen in “Guardians of the Galaxy”; Mckenna Grace as Young Carol Danvers; and Akira Akbar as Monica Rambeau, Maria’s daughter.

With the casting completed, director Ryan Fleck reflected upon the talented and diverse cast for “Captain Marvel.” “It was so fun to cast this film because there are so many really interesting roles,” he says. “There is not an actor in this film who plays a role that is in any way singular. They are like characters that have two sides to them—two interesting and strange sides. These actors are playing characters who are very surprising.”

FROM THE GROUND UP—THE MAKING OF “CAPTAIN MARVEL”

With “Captain Marvel” set in the mid-1990s, the filmmakers decided to base the production in Los Angeles for its 75-day shooting schedule. “As we developed a look and story for the film, it became important to Anna and Ryan in their approach to the material to make it as real as possible,” says executive producer Jonathan Schwartz. “That meant shooting on location, both for some of our alien environments and for some of our earthbound environments. And that meant shooting Los Angeles for Los Angeles, which we were really excited to be able to do. It also meant going out to some locations that were off the beaten path a little bit and get out of the city, which was super cool and something we don’t get to do on every film.”

Producer Kevin Feige offers, “Parts of this movie take place on other planets. Parts take place on spaceships. Of course, there’s going to be a certain amount of visual effects involved on other planets and a certain amount of beautiful, wonderful production design and set building involved on the interiors. But a large part of the film takes place on Earth, and for the Earth scenes we wanted it to feel very practical and very much on location, which is one of the reasons we wanted to shoot in Southern California. There was a reason our Hollywood forefathers settled in L.A., because there are so many great locations in and around Los Angeles.”

Feige adds, “We were able to secure amazing locations, like Eastwood Power Station and Shaver Lake in Fresno as well as the deserts in the Lucerne Valley and Edwards Air Force Base. So, this gives us moments in the film where it’s a huge, vast expanse, and it’s all actually a real practical environment. Practical locations like that just add a sense of scope and a sense of reality to it, which is what we really wanted when Carol is exploring her past and coming to terms with her own origin throughout the film.”

Production designer Andy Nicholson also could not have been happier with the choice to film in Los Angeles. “L.A. was the perfect place to film this movie. We managed to find locations that were 1990s locations, and we redressed them as that. For the Blockbuster sequence, we found a shopping mall that was built in the ’70s, was very active in the ’80s and ’90s and now was in complete disuse. So that was a natural.”

“When we first met with Kevin Feige he told us that the film was going to be set in Los Angeles in the ’90s,” adds Anna Boden. “He wanted to set it in a pre-Avengers world, when Nick Fury didn’t know about aliens and didn’t know about superheroes. And meeting Carol Danvers is sort of what inspires him to come up with the idea of the Avengers. And it’s just great to see a universe where we don’t know about all those other characters. You can’t just call on Steve Rogers. You can’t just call on Tony Stark when a crisis comes up because we don’t know what those guys can do yet. So, it really isolates Nick Fury and Carol Danvers in a way that’s fun. They have to kind of figure it out together on their own, which makes for a compelling, fun journey to go on.”

BRINGING THE WORLDS TO LIFE

While there were many practical locations for “Captain Marvel,” there was also a fair share of stage work where production designer Andy Nicholson and his team created the intergalactic worlds of the Kree and Skrulls. “Anytime you have a big sci-fi element in a film you end up with a lot of stage work,” says executive producer Jonathan Schwartz. “Those stages were filled with sets designed by our production design team, who did an amazing job bringing these Kree and Skrull ships to life. There are quite a few alien elements in the film. It’s all got to feel real and thorough and dialed in.”

“The biggest responsibility was working and coming up with the worlds for the Kree and Skrulls and giving them both an identity,” relates production designer Andy Nicholson. “So, I did lots of research, helped out by the Marvel guys, about both of the species and what the back history of the two species was, because they’d been into it with each other for more than a quarter millennium.”

Foremost in Nicholson’s mind was establishing the look of the worlds for future stories in the MCU, if needed, and making the two civilizations stand apart from each other visually, so that the audiences will be able to tell the two apart. The Kree world is angular and symmetrical, with heavy use of metals, and the Skrull world is curved and asymmetrical, with the use of ceramics and other organic materials. This basic broad-stroke design element applied to all elements of the two worlds, including buildings, spaceships, interiors and even clothing.

Describing his approach to creating the Skrull spaceships, Nicholson says, “The overall curved design for the Skrulls extended into the interiors of their ships as well. When you see the interior of the main battleship, it’s all about organic lines and curves. And a lot of it was made out of ceramic with a skeleton behind it. We did an architectural language that was about plates and skeletons and the skeletal structure behind that. So, there are layers and layers, and they are all woven organic materials. Contrasting that with the Kree world, where we just went for a much more linear, straight-line and angular look.”

Nicholson adds, “You know instantly if you’re in the Kree world or the Skrull world. You can identify the Kree spaceship in the sky because they are that angular shape, metallic and not curvy like the Skrulls’ ships. Besides making it easier for the audience, it also made sense for the world and the species and gave us languages that can be developed.”

On two of the biggest sound stages, Nicholson and his team built the interior of the Skrull battleship and the interior of Captain Marvel’s spaceship, which are both multiple-room sets. “I designed all the sets so they start off as one set,” comments Nicholson. “And then by plugging in and out different places, we turn them into other areas within the same spaceship. They each have four or five different variations within them.”

One of the biggest sets was the Kree transport system, which features in a scene at the beginning of the film. Nicholson describes how the set was envisioned to fit seamlessly into the Kree world. “We had the idea to do a two-layered city. There’s kind of a top layer, which is exposed, and then beneath that is another level that is all subterranean. Then we thought about how the people would travel between the levels.”

After creating mockups and after many discussions, the team came up with a glass-enclosed carriage that allows the scene to unfold as the Kree capital city serves as a backdrop. Another set depicting the Kree world, called Hala, was Carol Danvers’ apartment, which also gives audiences a look at Kree life as well as another look at the city.

One of the largest exterior set builds was the creation of the planet Torfa. To create the world, Nicholson took an existing sand mine and quarry in Simi Valley and transformed it into a visually dynamic setting for an important scene in the film.

Commenting on the mine, Nicholson says, “The mine gave us the opportunity to have an inordinate 400 feet of playing space, by 160 feet wide. We filled that with architectural elements, which are sort of destroyed ruins, and then used some archaeology around that. We also used colored sands to make it even more alien, with the blue and white colored parts.”

With thousands of pounds of sand brought in, Djimon Hounsou, who plays Korath, speaks about running through the sand on the epic set. “We shot a scene where we had to run with our guns drawn moving them side to side,” explains Hounsou. “So, on that day, the sand was a powdery type of sand, and the first step you took in it became like quicksand. On one of the takes, I lost my footing and went down headfirst. Luckily the powdery sand also provided a soft landing! I can’t wait to see the sequence in the film because, despite the challenges and footing, the visuals and action are really fun to watch.”

Lighting was integral to the success of the look of the Torfa set. Nicholson and the director of photography, Ben Davis, discussed doing night shoots so they could light the whole valley and give it a look that would not necessarily feel like a night scene. Nicholson explains, “So we colored all of the architecture and all of the sand based on what it would look like lit by this low end-of-night light. We came up with a color and did some camera tests on that so that it looked right on the costumes and the people. But we also worked to give a very alien look to the environment. And that really helped generate the whole thing.”

A huge temple and other ruins, as well as a bridge and also a ravine, were built into the quarry landscape to give the idea of the alien world. Commenting on the build, director Ryan Fleck says, “Andy did a fantastic job creating the world of Torfa. The first time I walked onto the set, I was just blown away by the size and scope of it. There were so many great elements, including a lake, which just added so much to the look of the film. We shot all nights there so when you see all of the smoke and lights drifting through the set, it just created fantastic textures and lines with a size and scope fitting the scene.”

To create the scene in which Carol Danvers does a crash landing into a Blockbuster Video store, filmmakers searched for an abandoned strip mall and found one in the North Hollywood section of Los Angeles. Nicholson’s team built a new facade including a Radio Shack, a Blockbuster and a dry cleaners. The location looked so authentic that people actually drove up to go into the location, not realizing that it was really a movie set. Creating the interior of the Blockbuster to replicate what it looked like back in the 1990s was a daunting task for the set decorators, who had to research the look and source and make hundreds of VHS boxes, plus recreate the artwork and signage.

In all, 40 sets were built in both interior and exterior locations, and in addition to the major sets, prison rooms, engine rooms, decks, airlocks, laboratories and a hangar dock were also practically constructed.

HIGHER, FURTHER, FASTER

One location secured early in the pre-production was Edwards Air Force Base just outside of Rosamond, Calif. In working with the Department of Defense and the Air Force base, the production was able to secure a vast array of locations and critical assets to shoot the film.

“The DOD and Air Force were incredibly helpful in putting this movie together,” says executive producer Jonathan Schwartz. “They gave us access to a lot of great pilots—the Thunderbirds and others—who could really help inform Carol as a character, and they worked really closely with Brie, our costume department and our production design team to make sure that everything we were trying to do with Carol felt authentic. They were also able to give us access to a lot of hardware and planes to help make our MCU locations feel like they were real, live, populated places with pilots, airplanes and military gear.”

To add to the authenticity of the flying scenes, Anna Boden, Brie Larson and Lashana Lynch visited Nellis Air Force Base in Las Vegas for some once-in-a-lifetime training and experiences.

“Part of Brie’s research for this film was not just reading the many amazing comics and source material that we pull from, but also going to Nellis and Edwards Air Force Bases and spending a lot of time with several officers and pilots and airmen up there, including General Leavitt, who was the first female Air Force fighter pilot,” explains producer Kevin Feige. “It was amazing, and in some ways, it was like meeting a real-life Carol Danvers. There was also something fun for us going full circle back to Edwards, where Tony Stark and Jim Rhodes did scenes on the first two ‘Iron Man’ films, and we got the same great support from all the airmen there as we had done ten years before on ‘Iron Man.’”

Feige adds, “Brie, Lashana and Anna all went up in F-16s and pulled serious Gs in going through all of the maneuvers they do in the training exercises, which is astounding. They all had their names stenciled on the side of the cockpit and went for an intense ride. And that’s one of the reasons why the scenes in the movie where they’re piloting ships and planes come off so authentically, because they have had the hands-on experience and have been up there.”

Brie Larson also was able to spend time with Brigadier General Jeannie M. Leavitt, who, besides becoming the United States Air Force’s first female fighter pilot in 1993, was the first woman to command a USAF combat fighter wing.

For Larson, spending the day with General Leavitt was an invaluable experience and honor as she prepared to take on the role of Carol Danvers. “It was great to be able to do that level of research and to see and understand the people that General Leavitt is representing, the incredible men and women of the Air Force, the fighter pilots, the crews that defend our country,” says Larson. “For General Leavitt, who paved the way for so many young women, to take the time to really sit down and talk with me was something very special. I was really moved in a way that I wasn’t really expecting coming into this. I felt like I kept having waves of emotion, and meeting her was one of the things I was incredibly fortunate to have the opportunity to do in preparation for the film.”

Things got more hands-on for Larson when she learned she would be experiencing the real deal in the cockpit of an F-16 fighter jet. “The fighter jet is so sensitive that at first I thought that it wasn’t working,” says Larson. “It felt like we were not really in control because it feels like it’s not moving at all. It’s based on pressure, so it gives you the sensation that it barely moves. It takes a while to get used to, but once I got used to it, it’s like nothing I had ever experienced before.”

For the actress, the return back to the base in the jet gave her a little taste of what the fighter pilots routinely experience. “It was a little bumpy coming back and there was pretty bad turbulence through the mountains,” says Larson. “Oh, I threw up a lot. But we were simulating a dog fight, so I was like flipping around going upside down, and it would be crazy if I didn’t get sick. We were on the offense. We were on the defense. My pilot, Kazi, was so incredible and super talented. We got to 6.5 Gs.”

The actress continues, “It was just amazing to feel all of that and being able to take that into production, so when we were simulating a barrel roll, I could recall exactly what that felt like in my body and how hard it is to breathe. It’s all of those little nuances that I hope will come through in the film, so that regardless of who you are, it feels real.”

The experience was not lost on Larson’s co-star Lashana Lynch, who went to Luke Air Force Base in Phoenix for her hands-on training. “I spent Monday with Taboo and Tuesday with Mother, which are the pilots’ call signs,” says Lynch. “Both of them have husbands and children and a household. And they’re both commanders of a squadron. They are both superwomen, and it was amazing to watch how they juggled everything. The next day I got to fly in an F-16, and I’m so excited that I did it. It was the best experience of my life. It was crazy. It was a whirlwind. You can’t really compare it to anything, actually. I pulled 6.9, and pulling more than 6 Gs is something I don’t know if I’ll experience ever again.”

“The Air Force was an incredible partner on the film,” says executive producer Patty Whitcher. “They gave us a ton of access and helped us a lot with the reality and the verisimilitude of what life in the Air Force is like. They were always willing to send out a couple of advisors when we needed it to make sure it all felt real and gritty and grounded. They also had some of the Thunderbirds come out to set, who are the coolest guys on the face of the Earth and the best pilots in the Air Force, which was super helpful.”

CREATING THE LOOKS

Aided by the character conceptualizations provided by Andy Park, Marvel Studios’ visual development supervisor, costume designer Sanja Hays first tackled the challenging task of Captain Marvel’s costume. “‘Captain Marvel’ predates all the other Marvel films, except for the first ‘Captain America’ film, so in a sense that gave us a little bit more freedom in designing the costume,” explains Hays. “There was a lot of talk as we started about what Captain Marvel was going to look like, because there were so many choices and directions it could have gone. But at the same time, it is a Marvel Cinematic Universe, and there were events that had already been established, which also influenced the direction of the costume design.”

Hays continues, “There were two things that were obviously iconic, the whole chest piece with the starburst and the red and blue colors. That was something that we couldn’t deviate from. We also knew that she was going to be a little bit different than some of the comics, as we wanted her to be more of a tomboy and pilot, not quite as sexy as the character in the comics. Brie Larson is obviously a beautiful woman, but in a way that makes it believable that she is an actual hero, a soldier and a pilot.”

In constructing the Captain Marvel costume, Hays and her team faced the challenge of adding functionality to the costume to allow Larson and the stunt team the movement they needed. “Translating the sketches into the real costumes that the actor can wear can be very challenging because they not only have to be able to walk in it, but they also need to be able to perform fluidly in action sequences,” explains Hays. “The costume is essentially somewhat like a jumpsuit, and it needed to be stretchy so that she can move in any direction.”

As a result, the costume design team had to create several different versions of the suit. One of them was the hero or beauty suit that was used for the close-ups and heroic moments. Another had a shorter top part, which made it easy for Brie Larson to sit down in it. Then for the action sequences when she was flying, the suit had soft shoulders and soft materials on all the normally hard parts of the costumes like the chest, the gauntlets and the belt. Otherwise, when she flew, it would be impossible to lift her arms and hang from the wires.

In total, the costume department made eight Captain Marvel suits for Larson. For the hero suits, the main fabric was leather with a special finish that was “pearlized” in blue so that it had a sheen to it when the light hit it.

In the MCU, when a new franchise character is introduced, the unveiling of a costume is always an exciting experience for everyone involved, including producer Kevin Feige as well. “In my 18 years at Marvel I’ve had several amazing experiences seeing actors wearing the costumes for the first time,” says Kevin Feige. “It happened for the first time when I saw all the X-Men all together 18 years ago, and you just get this sensation of, I can’t believe I’m looking at this in real life. There have been so many iconic moments, starting with Robert Downey putting on the Iron Man armor, Chris Evans stepping into the Captain America suit, Chris Hemsworth holding Thor’s hammer in full regalia, Chris Pratt in his Star-Lord outfit, Scarlett Johansson in the Black Widow outfit and most recently Chadwick Boseman in his Black Panther suit.

“When we had the first full costume fitting with Brie Larson, it was astounding. Seeing her in the suit, as the character we’ve been working on for years and dreaming about even longer, standing in front of you for the first time was incredible. It was an amazing start for the new adventure that lies ahead,” concludes Feige.

The moment was not lost on Brie Larson, either. “It was very surreal putting on the costume for the first time,” informs Larson. “It takes a couple people to get me suited up, so there’s a lot of movement happening around me as gloves are getting put on and sleeves are getting put on and things are getting zipped up behind me. You end up having a lot of time in the mirror to look at yourself as it is all happening. I’m a deep processor and love to process things. It’s taken me a year on this journey to finally begin to understand what it is that I’m doing and what it means to wear the suit and be the character. For me it’s less about how the suit feels on, and more about the reaction that I see when I’m wearing it.”

Larson continues, “The first time I tried it on I could see the Marvel team get so emotional when I walked into the tent to show everyone that I began to feel the weight of the situation. It always makes me emotional when I see photos of homemade Captain Marvel costumes that little girls have made with their moms. The idea of that star and these colors and what that symbol represents—strength, humility, compassion—just feels incredible. Bringing that into this world is very valuable and satisfying.”

Another challenge for the costume designer was realizing the look of the Skrulls for their debut in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. “In the comics, the Skrulls are in purple jumpsuits and a black undergarment, and we knew we did not want to do that,” says Hays. “The one thing that we did keep from the comics was the purple color, as the idea was to make them as different as possible from the teal and black of the Starforce costumes. So, through a lot of discussions, sketches and artwork, the decision was made to make the Skrulls be very asymmetrical and not have all that symmetry and strong lines that you typically see in Marvel characters. I was aware of how big a challenge that would present, because when you have a symmetrical costume you essentially do one half and then you do the reverse. But with the asymmetrical look we essentially had to do two costumes because everything was different on the left and the right.”

The costume designer continues, “The other challenge was that purple is a very sensitive color, and it can look very unpleasant really easily. We had decided to go with a dark purple, but then there are a lot of night scenes, so we made them kind of shiny and interesting in texture with lots of detail so that in the low light they didn’t look like jumpsuits. I think we were very successful, and they looked great.”

“There were so many different looks for the Skrulls, and Sanja did such a great job creating that world from a costume standpoint,” says director Anna Boden. “The Skrulls are so beloved in the comics, and Sanja did a great job giving them our distinctive look for the film. She really did that with every character she designed as well, creating period-appropriate costumes for the ’90s that looked great and were authentic without making them feel they were being designed to lampoon the era.”

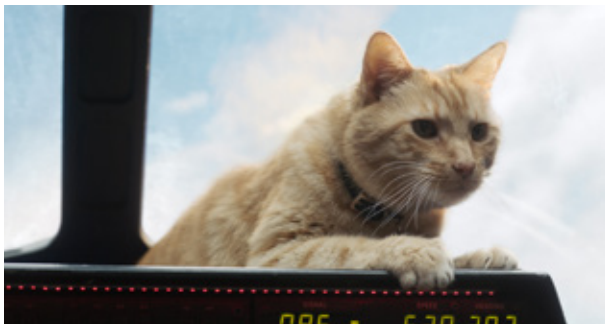

Jude Law, representing the Kree in their teal and black, symmetrical uniforms, says of the power of his costume: “I’m always astounded at the power of seeing yourself for the first time in the costume that’s been decided on in its final stages. It gives you such assistance in finding a character and performing a character. I had several fittings, but the day it was finished, and I got to really sort of step back and look, it was so exciting. The attention to detail and the quality of the suits they make are just extraordinary. They look fantastic, and there’s a scale to everything that helps fill in certain areas. It also gives you the sense of the formidable presence that Starforce has.”

Reflecting on her experience in creating the world of Captain Marvel through her costumes’ textures and colors, Hays says, “From a costume standpoint, this film was a big challenge for us in the costumes because we had costumes from the ’70s, ’80s and ’90s.”

She continues, “Then we really had Captain Marvel and the whole Starforce team. Then we had a big collection of Skrulls, and their leader, Talos. Then we had the whole world of Hala, the people and two worlds of the Hala with the subzone and the upper zone. We had the world of Torfa. So, there were a lot of different worlds that we had to create, and each of them were completely different in color, image and texture. It was quite challenging for us, but also a lot of fun, and I really hope that audiences enjoy all of the visual worlds we created.”

INTRODUCING GOOSE THE CAT

A unique character in the film—and something new to the Marvel Cinematic Universe—is Goose, a tabby cat, who was played by several different cats. This is the first time that a cat has been front and center in the MCU. “Goose was primarily played by real-life cats,” explains Jonathan Schwartz. “We auditioned several different cats, and we ended up with a cat named Reggie. Reggie came with a team of three other cats: Archie, Gonzo and Rizzo. They all specialize in certain tricks and performance.”

Reggie was the hero cat, who has a special knack for facial expressions. Archie, Gonzo and Rizzo filled in for Reggie when he was tired or when filmmakers needed a very specific trick that one of the other three cats had been trained for.

When one of the cats was not cooperating, or the actors didn't feel comfortable around them, filmmakers used a stuffed cat puppet that Legacy Effects created for the film. And if that didn't work, they went to Plan B and created a CGI cat that was so lifelike that most people could not tell whether or not it was the real cat. So, the Goose feline character ended up being a combination of several cats and visual effects.

For producer Kevin Feige, working with a cat as a co-star was a learning experience, but well worth the effort and challenge of having live cats on the set working with the cast. "Reggie is going to be a big star after this film," laughs Feige. "In the process, we learned several things. One is you can do an incredibly realistic computer-generated cat, and the other thing we learned is that cats can be incredibly well trained and sometimes hit their mark better than some of the human cast members they were sharing the screen with. So, it was this amazing combination that resulted in a real performance for this cat, which really worked like a charm. People are really going to love this cat."

"Yes, there were cats, and there were children on set, which goes against conventional wisdom and can wreak havoc on your shooting schedule," says director Anna Boden with a smile. "But Reggie was a delight. Super cute, super friendly."

Having a real cat on set turned out to be a bonus for the directing team, Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck. "Sam Jackson was great with the cat, who knew that he was such a cat lover?" says Fleck. "It was great, and when you can see that Nick Fury is interacting with a real cat it really helps the scene. Even in the scenes where we might replace the real cat with a digital cat, it's important to know how the characters in the scene interact with the cat. It also provided a great reference for our visual effects team, as it was good to know what the real cat looked like under the actual conditions."

"What we also loved about the real cats was their spontaneity, as sometimes a cat would just go up and unexpectedly start rubbing up against an actor or give itself a kitty bath," adds Boden.

Laughing, she offers, "I remember when we wrote the first outline for this film and we shared it with Kevin Feige. His first note was that we need 200% more Goose the Cat in this movie. We gave it to him, and I think he was right, because the more time I spend with this film, the more I love that cat."

TRAINING TO THE MAX

"Captain Marvel" is chock-full of action and adventure, so Brie Larson transformed herself to get ready to play a Marvel Super Hero. She committed to months of stunt and fight training to be able to perform as much of the action and fight sequences as she could in the film.

"Brie is the most diligent and dedicated actor that I've ever worked with," says fight coordinator Walter Garcia. "She came in and put so much time and energy into her training, and it is really going to show on camera. Five days a week she did two to three hours of training, which was a combination of boxing, kickboxing, judo, a bit of wrestling and some jujitsu. She learned several different martial-art styles to prepare herself for this role."

Larson's dedication in preparing for the film inspired her cast mates, who also joined her in working with Garcia. "Jude got advance intel that Brie was training heavily," says Garcia. "So, when he came in for his first day of fight training and saw Brie with her boxing gloves on pounding on the heavy mitts, he was very impressed and inspired. It was the best thing for him because after that day, he started coming in every day and training. Because they had so much time training together, their chemistry and fight choreography was seamless. It also felt like they've been training with each other for years, just like the characters."

"I always do a fair bit of training, and I arrived with a couple of months to train and learn some of the fight choreography," injects Jude Law. "Brie had already been training for three months, so I knew her dedication was extraordinary. She's really led by example from the front. Every day she arrived with spirit and was fun to be around, which is important because you spend days picking apart fight scenes without any dialogue. For me it was just a case of finding out what I needed to do and then put in the hours of rehearsing, practicing and training with Brie and Walter. Walter has a great team and is a great fight choreographer."

Larson trained for nine months to build up her physical strength before filming even began and worked her way to lifting over 225 pounds in deadlifts, 400-pound hip thrusts and even pulling a jeep down the road.

The actress, who had never done much strength training, speaks about the training process that resulted in a complete physical transformation of strength and balance. "A lot of the training first came from the fact that I knew I was doing an action movie, and I was going to have to do stunts," says Brie Larson. "I didn't know what that was, but I knew that a movie like this was going to feel like a triathlon, and I wanted to be as prepared as possible so that I wasn't fighting while being fatigued or my body hurting. The character is so strong, so I knew that if I could go through that experience I would get closer to her and even just standing I could feel really strong rather than trying to act strong."

She adds, "Honestly, I didn't know what strength was, because I was truly an introvert with asthma before this film. But as I started training I fell in love with it and the way my body was changing and transforming. It was the first time where I felt like I was making my body work for me. I think in the past I was more interested in my body never being part of a conversation because it felt like objectification. I just wanted to be a brain, so I've only cared about like reading books and like understanding words, but this was an opportunity for me to take it back and make my body mine."

Larson continues, "It wasn't until we started filming and I started doing crazy stunts that people started saying on set, 'Wow, this is amazing, and by the way, no one does this.' So, it was a little ignorance more than anything else, but I found it really empowering, and I do want to say that I have two amazing stunt doubles in this, Renae MoneyMaker and Joanna Bennett, who are both super talented and helped me so much. I put in nine months of intense work that included twelve weeks of four and a half hours of training a day. It seemed as if I was training for a marathon, but it means so much more to me knowing the type of dedication I put into it and that it's not just CGI."

"Brie pushed all-in from the minute she walked out on that stage at Comic-Con and the world embraced her," says Kevin Feige. "I remember after that moment at Comic-Con, she would sometimes put up Instagram photos of her reading a Captain Marvel comic. Then, long before cameras started rolling, she worked out and trained a tremendous amount and got into what she says is the best physical shape of her life so she could just dedicate herself to playing this part. That physical and mental dedication continued during a very long and physically taxing shoot. Every step of the way she was not just dedicated to her craft, but also to exceeding the expectations and fulfilling the hopes and dreams of the audience.”

TURNING BACK THE CLOCK

While Larson got herself into the best shape of her life to play the role, for Samuel L. Jackson and Clark Gregg, no workout or magic bullet would produce the results needed to make them look like their respective characters did 24 years ago. To create the desired effect, the filmmakers called upon visual effects supervisor Christopher Townsend and the artists at the visual effects house Lola to transform the actors back to the mid-’90s version of their characters.

“The movie is set in 1995,” says Townsend. “So that meant de-aging Sam Jackson and Clark Gregg, who are Nick Fury and Agent Coulson in the film. The challenge was we had to take 24 years off these characters. The payoff for fans is seeing these characters early in their careers, which is fun. It was also helpful that both Sam Jackson and Clark Gregg look young for their respective ages.”

Townsend continues, “For both of those actors and characters, we had a lot of footage and reference material for what they looked like in 1995. We looked at older movies and photography to reference what is it that made them look exactly the way they did and what we needed to do to get them looking like that again. The de-aging process is literally a frame-by-frame process, and it’s a real artistry. There are artists sitting at computers for months to finesse these looks but not stepping on the performance, which is a critical aspect of it. If you pull the cheeks back or you lift the mouth a certain way or open the eyes slightly too wide, their reaction to something becomes very different than what the actor did on the day. So, one of the things we had to do at all times is maintain the performance the actor brought on the day because that’s what the directors wanted.”

Director Ryan Fleck discusses how he and Anna Boden approached Samuel L. Jackson’s and Clark Gregg’s performances in the film. “As we were shooting, we kept a very close eye on their performances to make sure that the effect looked good and it didn’t start looking weird and fake,” explains Fleck. “We tried to make sure that when we gave Chris Townsend the takes to use, we were very confident that they would be in the film, since so many hours of work goes into every shot of Sam and Clark in the film.”

SKRULLING WITH THE BEST

Another challenge for Christopher Townsend and his visual effects team was collaborating with filmmakers to bring the Kree’s archenemies, the Skrulls, to life. For Townsend, figuring out how to translate the Skrull world from comics onto the big screen was no easy task. “It’s really fun when you look at the comics and you can see how they did it,” says Townsend, “but we knew if we just did a straight adaptation from the comics it just would not look real because you have to think about things in a far more detailed way in the film world to create something that an audience believes and accepts.”

Continuing, Townsend adds, “The Skrulls are also fascinating characters because they are green. A lot of the design has been taken from the aesthetics that have been established in the comic books. That is often the starting point for us in Marvel films from a visual effects standpoint, and we move off that sometimes and go down slightly different avenues.”

The Skrulls are heavily prosthetic, but Townsend and his team were able to create a great blend between visual effects and special-effects makeup. Legacy Effects created the prosthetics for Talos, the main Skrull played by Ben Mendelsohn, and, according to Townsend, “It was just beautiful work and looked great. It was so good that we really didn’t have to do a lot of work on him.”

The other Skrulls on the ships that are not seen as much wore masks in which their eyes were constantly open with a frozen look. The visual effects team gave the eyes some life and manipulated the mouths. “It is always great for visual effects when you start with great physical performances on camera, as they create an aesthetic and feeling that we try to maintain and emulate in our VFX enhancements and performances,” notes Townsend.

“Brian Sipe and all the team at Legacy Effects did an incredible job with all the special-effects makeup for the Skrulls and really hit it out of the park in creating the look for Talos,” says director Anna Boden. “Seeing Ben Mendelsohn transform into Talos was an experience the cast and crew never grew tired of seeing. The special-effects makeup and costume gave him such a great place from which to find the character. Everyone on set always knew when Ben was ‘Skrulling,’ as he would call it. He looked great in the prosthetics and was a trooper about the long process, but it really paid off as audiences are in for a real treat in seeing him bring the character to life so dynamically.”

“CAPTAIN MARVEL” SETS COURSE FOR THE BIG SCREEN

When “Captain Marvel” flies into theaters, audiences will be introduced to a powerful new Super Hero character who is stepping up to take her place in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. “It’s going to be an incredibly fun ride with an amazing character that I think audiences are really going to love,” says Jonathan Schwartz. “It’s not going to be the ride you expect. I think people are going to come to this movie expecting a certain type of film and get something really fresh.”

“The humor between Nick Fury and Carol Danvers is very special and is a lot of fun,” adds director Ryan Fleck. “There are several breakout characters in the film, and Goose the Cat is a scene-stealer!”

Director Anna Boden offers a hint of what to expect from “Captain Marvel”: “We are going to meet a new, extremely important part of the MCU; a new character who is unlike any of the other characters, who is her own unique self, and who goes on a journey of self-discovery along with the audiences who go to see her.”

She concludes, “It’s a mystery film, a film of self-discovery, and something that really surprises, and at the end of the day we hope it turns your expectations on their head.”

*“It’s indescribable to work with creative people, especially people who make movies. It’s such a thrill.
And I keep saying to myself I can’t believe this is me. I can’t believe I lucked out this way.
But it’s something you never forget. I remember every cameo I’ve done since the first one.
And I think I’m a very lucky guy.”*

ABOUT THE CAST

BRIE LARSON (Carol Danvers/Captain Marvel) won the 2016 Academy Award®, Golden Globe®, Screen Actors Guild Award®, BAFTA, Critics' Choice and National Board of Review awards for her breakthrough lead performance in the film "Room," directed by Lenny Abrahamson and adapted from the best-selling book by Emma Donoghue, about a young woman and her 5-year-old son who finally gain their freedom after being held captive for years.

Most recently, Larson starred in "The Glass Castle," based on the best-selling memoir by Jeannette Walls, reteaming her with director Destin Daniel Cretton. The film was released by Lionsgate in August 2017. Earlier that year, she starred in Warner Bros.' "Kong: Skull Island," directed by Jordan Vogt-Roberts, which earned $566 million worldwide, and the Martin Scorsese executive-produced '70s crime thriller "Free Fire," directed by Ben Wheatley. The latter premiered at the 2016 Toronto and London film festivals.

Next up, Larson will be seen in Cretton's "Just Mercy," alongside Michael B. Jordan, scheduled to be released in January 2020. She is also set to produce and star in the upcoming "Victoria Woodhull" for Amazon Studios—about the first female candidate for the presidency of the United States.

In addition to acting, Larson is a writer and director. Her feature film directorial debut, "Unicorn Store," premiered at the 2017 Toronto International Film Festival. She also starred. A short film she wrote and directed, "The Arm," won the Special Jury Award for Comedic Storytelling at the 2012 Sundance Film Festival.

In 2013, Larson starred in "Short Term 12," her first collaboration with director Destin Daniel Cretton. Her dramatic role as Grace, the director of a foster care facility, earned her best actress wins at the Locarno Film Festival and Gotham Awards, and a best actress nomination at the Critics' Choice Awards. The Los Angeles Times labeled her the "It Girl" of the SXSW Film Festival, where the film first premiered.

Larson has worked with top directors and co-stars on notable films, including Judd Apatow's "Trainwreck" opposite writer/star Amy Schumer; Rupert Wyatt's "The Gambler" opposite Mark Wahlberg; James Ponsoldt's "The Spectacular Now" opposite Shailene Woodley and Miles Teller; Joseph Gordon-Levitt's directorial debut, "Don Jon"; Phil Lord and Chris Miller's "21 Jump Street" as the love interest to Jonah Hill; Oren Moverman's "Rampart" as the defiant daughter of Woody Harrelson; Edgar Wright's "Scott Pilgrim vs. the World"; and Noah Baumbach's "Greenberg" as a young temptress flirting with Ben Stiller.

Larson is still widely recognized for her portrayal of Toni Collette's sarcastic and rebellious daughter in Showtime's breakout comedy-drama "United States of Tara," which was created by Academy Award®-winning writer Diablo Cody and based on an original idea by Steven Spielberg.

She has appeared onstage at the prestigious Williamstown Theatre Festival in the role of Emily in "Our Town" and recurred on the FX cult favorite series "The League." A native of Sacramento, Larson started studying drama at the early age of 6, as the youngest student ever to attend the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco. Larson currently resides in Los Angeles.

Appearing in well over 100 films, SAMUEL L. JACKSON (Nick Fury) is one of the most respected actors in Hollywood. Jackson's portrayal of Jules, the philosopher hitman, in Quentin Tarantino's "Pulp Fiction" made an indelible mark on American cinema. In addition to unanimous critical acclaim, he received Academy Award® and Golden Globe® nominations as well as a best supporting actor award from the British Academy of Film and Television Arts for his portrayal.

Last June, Jackson voiced Frozone in the long-awaited sequel to Disney's "The Incredibles." This January, Jackson starred in the follow-up to M. Night Shyamalan's iconic film "Unbreakable" with Bruce Willis and James McAvoy, entitled "Glass." Jackson also stars in the upcoming "Shaft" reboot, scheduled for a June release, and "Spider-Man: Far From Home," which releases in July. He is currently filming "The Banker," which is directed by George Nolfi and also stars Nicholas Hoult and Anthony Mackie.

In 2017, Jackson starred in Lionsgate's "The Hitman's Bodyguard" with Ryan Reynolds, Salma Hayek and Gary Oldman, in addition to Warner Bros.' "Kong: Skull Island" with Brie Larson and Tom Hiddleston. In 2015, Jackson appeared in Quentin Tarantino's Oscar®-nominated Western "The Hateful Eight." He starred as Major Marquis Warren, alongside Walton Goggins, Jennifer Jason Leigh and Kurt Russell. That same year, Jackson appeared in Matthew Vaughn's "Kingsman: The Secret Service" and Spike Lee's "Chi-Raq."

In 2016, Jackson was seen in David Yates' "The Legend of Tarzan," starring alongside Alexander Skarsgård, Margot Robbie and Christoph Waltz, in addition to Tim Burton's "Miss Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children." Also in 2016, Jackson completed production on Brie Larson's directorial debut, "Unicorn Store"; "The Last Full Measure," with Sebastian Stan, Christopher Plummer and Ed Harris; as well as Dan Fogelman's "Life Itself."

In 2012, he co-starred in Quentin Tarantino's "Django Unchained" as Stephen, with Christoph Waltz, Jamie Foxx and Leonardo DiCaprio. He also starred in "Marvel's The Avengers," which is part of his nine-picture deal with Marvel Studios. Jackson reprised his role in both Marvel's "Captain America: The Winter Soldier," which was released in April 2014, and the 2015 sequel "The Avengers: Age of Ultron."

BEN MENDELSON (Talos) is a critically acclaimed and award-winning actor who most recently won the outstanding supporting actor in a drama series Emmy® Award for his role in the Netflix series "Bloodline." He was also nominated for Golden Globe® and Critics' Choice awards for his role in the first season of "Bloodline."

He was awarded a 2013 British Independent Film Award for his performance in David Mackenzie's "Starred Up." In 2010, Mendelsohn starred opposite Guy Pearce in David Michôd's highly acclaimed feature "Animal Kingdom" (winner of the Sundance Film Festival World Cinema Dramatic Grand Jury Prize). His performance in the film earned him both of Australia's top awards—an AFI Award and an IF Award for best lead actor.

Following his acclaimed performance in "Animal Kingdom," he landed three starring roles in coveted films: Christopher Nolan's "The Dark Knight Rises," opposite Christian Bale and Anne Hathaway; Derek Cianfrance's "The Place Beyond the Pines," with Ryan Gosling and Bradley Cooper; and Andrew Dominik's "Killing Them Softly," opposite Brad Pitt.

Last November, Mendelsohn starred in "Robin Hood," in which he played the Sheriff of Nottingham opposite Taron Egerton as Robin Hood. Also, in April 2018, he was seen in "Untogether," opposite Jennifer Grey and Jamie Dornan. He recently completed work on David Michôd's "The King," which will be released later this year.

Mendelsohn's other recent films include Lucasfilm's "Rogue One: A Star Wars Story"; Benedict Andrews' "Una," co-starring with Rooney Mara; Steven Spielberg's "Ready Player One"; and Joe Wright's "Darkest Hour," in which he portrayed King George VI opposite Gary Oldman as Winston Churchill.

His other work includes "Mississippi Grind," opposite Ryan Reynolds; Ridley Scott's "Exodus: Gods and Kings"; "Slow West," co-starring Michael Fassbender; and Ryan Gosling's directorial debut, "Lost River." Earlier films include Rachel Ward's feature debut, "Beautiful Kate," alongside Rachel Griffiths (for which he received an AFI Award nomination for best lead actor); David Caesar's "Prime Mover"; Alex Proyas' "Knowing," starring Nicolas Cage and Rose Byrne; and Baz Luhrmann's "Australia."

DJIMON HOUNSOU (Korath) is a two-time Academy Award®-nominated actor for his work in Ed Zwick's "Blood Diamond" and Jim Sheridan's "In America."

Hounsou was recently seen starring in the films "Aquaman," "Serenity," "King Arthur: Legend of the Sword," "Same Kind of Different as Me," "The Legend of Tarzan," "Air" and "Furious 7." He also wrote, directed and produced the documentary "In Search of Voodoo: Roots to Heaven."

In 2015, Hounsou appeared in the fantasy adventure film "Seventh Son," with Jeff Bridges and Julianne Moore, and in Mark Neveldine's thriller "The Vatican Tapes." He also lent his voice to "How to Train Your Dragon 2."

In 2013, Hounsou was seen in Fox Searchlight's "Baggage Claim," a romantic comedy co-starring Paula Patton, Adam Brody, Taye Diggs and Derek Luke.

Born in Benin, West Africa, Hounsou moved to Paris at the age of 13 to pursue a Western education. As an adult, he was discovered by fashion designer Thierry Mugler and subsequently modeled for and appeared in several iconic music videos for legendary photographer Herb Ritts and director David Fincher. Small film roles followed before Hounsou's breakthrough performance as Cinque, the African who leads an uprising to regain his freedom, in Steven Spielberg's "Amistad" (1997). Hounsou earned a Golden Globe® nomination and an NAACP Image Award for the part. He later shared a SAG Award® nomination as a member of the cast of Ridley Scott's Academy Award®-winning best picture, "Gladiator."

In 2006, Hounsou received an NAACP Image Award, a National Board of Review citation and a Screen Actors Guild Award® nomination for his role as a forced laborer who discovers a rare gem in "Blood Diamond," starring Leonardo DiCaprio. For his performance as an artist afflicted with AIDS in "In America," Hounsou garnered an Independent Spirit Award, was named 2004's ShoWest supporting actor of the year and shared an ensemble SAG Award® nomination.

In 2010, Hounsou starred opposite Helen Mirren, Russell Brand, Alfred Molina and Chris Cooper in Julie Taymor's screen adaptation of "The Tempest." His film credits also include Michael Bay's "The Island," with Ewan McGregor and Scarlett Johansson; "Eragon"; "Constantine," with Keanu Reeves; Jan de Bont's "Lara Croft Tomb Raider: The Cradle of Life," with Angelina Jolie; and Shekhar Kapur's "The Four Feathers," with Heath Ledger and Kate Hudson.

For television, Hounsou voiced the Black Panther in the BET animated series based on the Marvel comic of the same name. He also starred as a refugee who was seeking asylum in a memorable six-episode arc on "ER" and played a recurring role in the series "Alias," starring Jennifer Garner.

Hounsou is producing and developing a slate of feature films and documentaries via his company Somnium Entertainment.

As a celebrity ambassador for Oxfam, he advocates for the poor, aid to Africa, farmers affected by unfair international trade rules, and other social justice issues. In 2009, he opened the UN General Assembly in New York with a compelling speech about the impact of climate change on developing nations. Hounsou also appeared before the U.S. Senate on behalf of the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act and participated in a hearing and summit for the international Arms Trade Treaty.

LEE PACE (Ronan) is an award-winning actor of film, stage and screen. Born in Oklahoma, Pace began his acting career at the Alley Theatre in Houston before training at the Juilliard School. As a member of Group 30 in Juilliard's Drama Division, Pace starred in productions of "Romeo and Juliet," "Richard III" and "Julius Caesar."

Pace's breakout role in the Sundance hit "Soldier's Girl" gained him recognition and critical acclaim. The true story of a transgendered woman dating a U.S. Army soldier, Pace's performance in the Peabody Award-winning film earned him a Gotham Award, as well as his first nominations for a Golden Globe® and Independent Spirit Award.

Pace then returned to theater for a limited run of the off-Broadway production "Small Tragedy" and was nominated for the Lucille Lortel Award as outstanding actor. He was again nominated for a Lucille Lortel Award in 2006, for his starring role in the two-character play "Guardians."

Pace continued his work on film in Doug McGrath's Truman Capote memoir/biography "Infamous," opposite Toby Jones, Sandra Bullock and Daniel Craig, and then in Robert De Niro's CIA drama "The Good Shepherd," with Matt Damon. Pace next starred in "The Fall" for visionary director Tarsem Singh, which premiered at the 2006 Toronto International Film Festival.

Pace then went on to star in Bryan Fuller's award-winning and critically-acclaimed television series "Pushing Daisies," for which he was again nominated for a Golden Globe®, this time as outstanding lead actor. While the dramedy television series ran on ABC for only two seasons, it earned a dedicated fan base and has since reached cult status.

Pace next starred in "Miss Pettigrew Lives for a Day," with Amy Adams and Frances McDormand. He then worked with Tom Ford on his directorial debut, "A Single Man," and later opposite Uma Thurman in Max Winkler's "Ceremony." Pace returned to the stage for the Tony Award®-nominated Broadway revival production of Larry Kramer's "The Normal Heart."

In 2012, Pace starred in three blockbuster films: as the nomadic vampire Garrett in the "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn – Part 2"; as congressman and Confederate supporter Fernando Wood in Steven Spielberg's "Lincoln"; and as the elven king Thranduil in Peter Jackson's "The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey" (a role that spans the entire trilogy).

In 2015, Pace starred in the AMC drama series "Halt and Catch Fire," in which he plays a tech visionary during the rise of the personal computing boom of the 1980s. Pace also starred in Stephen Frears' "The Program" and Peter Jackson's "The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies," as well as Marvel Studios' "Guardians of the Galaxy," where he originated the role of Ronan.

Recently, Pace starred in the films "Driven," "The Party's Just Beginning," "The Keeping Hours," "Revolt" and "The Book of Henry."

LASHANA LYNCH (Maria Rambeau) recently completed work in the leading role of Agent 355 in FX's drama "Y," which is based on the award-winning graphic novel "Y: The Last Man." Lynch stars opposite Diane Lane, Barry Keoghan and Imogen Poots for director Melina Matsoukas and showrunner Michael Green. She is currently filming "The Intergalactic Adventures of Max Cloud" for director Martin Owen, starring opposite Scott Adkins and Tommy Flanagan.

Lynch broke through when she was cast by Shonda Rhimes in the lead role of Rosaline in the ABC show “Still Star-Crossed,” the dramatic continuation of Romeo and Juliet. Other films include “Brotherhood,” “Powder Room” and “Fast Girls.” Lynch gained rave reviews for her performance in “Educating Rita” at Chichester Festival Theatre, where she played the iconic title role opposite Lenny Henry. She is also a Laurence Olivier Bursary Award winner.

GEMMA CHAN (Minn-Erva), one of Variety’s 10 Actors to Watch 2018, was recently seen starring in the box-office hit “Crazy Rich Asians.” After graduating with a law degree from Oxford University, Chan was offered a job with a leading law firm but turned it down to train at the prestigious Drama Centre London.

Chan has shown her range in television dramas such as the BAFTA best drama series winner “Sherlock,” alongside Benedict Cumberbatch and Martin Freeman, and with standout turns in comedies including Showtime/ITV’s “Secret Diary of a Call Girl” and Channel 4’s award-winning “Fresh Meat.” Chan has appeared in some of Britain’s best-loved television, including “Doctor Who: The Waters of Mars,” with David Tennant and Lindsay Duncan, and BAFTA and International Emmy® Award-winning sitcom “The IT Crowd.” She also starred in BBC One’s “True Love,” a five-part drama from director Dominic Savage; “Shetland,” written by award-winning crime writer Ann Cleeves; the second series of Sky Living’s supernatural drama “Bedlam”; and as one of the leads in the Channel 4 drama “Dates,” named in The Guardian’s Best TV of 2013.

In 2015, Chan appeared in the BBC’s six-part drama “The Game,” with Tom Hughes and Brian Cox, which premiered on BBC America. She was also featured in the comedy series “Brotherhood” on Comedy Central. 2015 also saw Chan take the lead role as Anita, an anthropomorphic robot, in the eight-part science-fiction drama “Humans,” Channel 4’s most successful drama in 20 years. Chan’s role as Anita saw her nominated in the best actress category in the NME Awards 2016. The second series of “Humans” aired in late 2016, and Chan reprised her lead role in the third series, which began in May 2018. In July of 2016, Chan provided the voice for Dewdrop in the animated television series “Watership Down” for BBC One. Additionally, she voiced the role of Snow White in the animated Christmas special “Revolting Rhymes,” which aired on BBC One in December 2016.

Chan’s film credits include the critically acclaimed, BAFTA-nominated “Submarine” and “The Double,” nominated for best film at the London Film Festival, both directed by Richard Ayoade. She also appeared in the BAFTA-nominated psychological thriller “Exam,” nominated for best feature at the Raindance Film Festival 2009, directed by Stuart Hazeldine, and “Shanghai,” a World War II drama directed by Mikael Håfström. In 2014, Chan made her Hollywood film debut in Paramount’s spy thriller “Jack Ryan: Shadow Recruit,” directed by Kenneth Branagh. In 2015, she was cast in the French film “Belles Familles,” written and directed by Jean-Paul Rappeneau. Later in 2015, Chan filmed David Yates’ “Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them,” written by J.K. Rowling. Last year, she completed filming the action thriller “Stratton,” directed by Simon West, and starred in “London Fields,” directed by Mathew Cullen.

Most recently she can be seen as Bess of Hardwick in “Mary Queen of Scots,” directed by Josie Rourke. The film released in the U.S. last December. Next she will be seen in “Intrigo: Dear Agnes,” the second feature of director Daniel Alfredson’s trilogy based on the thriller novels by Swedish writer Hakan Nesser.

An accomplished stage actress, Chan made her debut in the British premiere of Bertolt Brecht’s “Turandot” at the Hampstead Theatre. In November 2013, she was chosen by Tony Award®- and Olivier Award-winning playwright Timberlake Wertenbaker to star as Athena in the world premiere of “Our Ajax” at the Southwark Playhouse. Chan performed in the sell-out run of the critically acclaimed “Yellow Face,” by Tony Award-winning and Pulitzer Prize finalist David Henry Hwang, at the Park Theatre and, in May 2014, appeared in the National Theatre’s revival of “Yellow Face.” In 2015, Chan starred in the West End revival of Harold Pinter’s masterpiece

“The Homecoming,” at The Trafalgar Studios.

Her work on “Humans” led to her making the one-off documentary “How to Build a Human,” which followed the creation of “Chanbot,” built by a leading team of AI experts, designers and special effects companies.

Chan is classically trained on the violin and piano and is a passionate supporter of human rights, working with charities including UNICEF.

RUNE TEMTE (Bron-Char) is the first Norwegian to have been cast in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. He is a classically trained actor from the Drama Studio London and started out working with theaters in Scandinavia playing many notable parts, including Shakespeare’s Hamlet, Puck and Oberon.

Temte played professional soccer before pursuing his love of acting. He is known worldwide for his portrait of the Viking warlord Ubba in the successful drama series “The Last Kingdom” and for his role in the international blockbuster “Eddie the Eagle,” where he plays Bjørn, the Norwegian coach.

Rune Temte’s work also includes Sky Atlantic’s popular TV series “Fortitude,” Swedish hit gangster comedy “The Hitmen” and the heavy metal cult movie “Heavy Trip” from Finland.

ALGENIS PEREZ SOTO (Att-Lass) made his motion picture debut as the star of “Sugar,” which was written and directed by Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck.

Soto’s other film credits include the sports drama film “Sambá” and the Dominican Republic film “La isla rota.” He recently wrapped photography on the independent film “Isolated Victim.”

MCKENNA GRACE (Young Carol) is best known for her breakout role starring in Fox Searchlight’s “Gifted,” opposite Chris Evans for director Marc Webb. She was also recently seen in the comedy “How to Be a Latin Lover,” alongside Kristen Bell, Michael Cera and Salma Hayek for director Ken Marino, as well as the TIFF 2017 breakout hit “I, Tonya,” where she plays Young Tonya Harding.

Mckenna recurs as Kiefer Sutherland’s daughter on ABC’s hit series “Designated Survivor” and was recently seen on Netflix’s “The Haunting of Hill House,” alongside Carla Gugino, Michiel Huisman and Timothy Hutton. Mckenna will next be seen in Amazon’s “Troop Zero” and was seen most recently in a recurring role on “Young Sheldon.”

ANNETTE BENING (Supreme Intelligence) is a four-time Academy Award® nominee, two-time Golden Globe® Award and Screen Actors Guild Award® winner. Most recently, Bening appeared in Dan Fogelman’s “Life Itself,” alongside Oscar Isaac and Olivia Wilde, as well as Michael Mayer’s film adaptation of Anton Chekhov’s play “The Seagull,” with Saoirse Ronan, Elisabeth Moss and Corey Stoll. Upcoming projects include Christoph Waltz’s directorial debut, “Georgetown,” with Waltz and Vanessa Redgrave, and William Nicholson’s “Hope Gap,” opposite Bill Nighy.

Additional film credits include “Film Stars Don’t Die in Liverpool,” “20th Century Women,” “Rules Don’t Apply,” “Danny Collins,” “The Search,” “The Face of Love,” “Ruby Sparks,” “Girl Most Likely,” “Ginger & Rosa,” “The Kids

Are All Right," "Mother and Child," "Being Julia," "American Beauty," "In Dreams," "The Siege," "The American President," "Mars Attacks!," "Richard III," "Love Affair," "Bugsy," "Regarding Henry," "The Grifters," "Guilty by Suspicion," "Valmont," "Postcards from the Edge" and "The Great Outdoors."

On the stage, Bening will next star in Gregory Mosher's Broadway revival of Arthur Miller's classic "All My Sons," alongside Tracy Letts. She was last seen onstage in Public Theater's 2014 Shakespeare in the Park production of "King Lear." Additional theater credits include "Ruth Draper's Monologues" at Geffen Playhouse, Anton Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard" at Mark Taper Forum, Alan Bennett's "Talking Heads" at Tiffany Theater, Henrik Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler" at Geffen Playhouse, and "Medea" at UCLA.

Bening received a Tony Award® nomination and won the Clarence Derwent Award for Outstanding Debut Performance of the Season for her role in "Coastal Disturbances."

Bening graduated from San Francisco State University and trained at the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco until she joined the acting company.

CLARK GREGG (Agent Coulson) began his acting career as a founding member and former artistic director of the Atlantic Theater Company in New York. He has acted in many of the company's productions, including "Boys' Life" at Lincoln Center, "Mojo," "The Night Heron," "Sexual Perversity in Chicago" and "Happy Hour," written by Ethan Coen. He also appeared in the original Broadway production of "A Few Good Men" by Aaron Sorkin.

Gregg moved to Los Angeles in the mid-'90s to pursue film and television work, landing roles in films including "Mr. Popper's Penguins," "500 Days of Summer," "Choke," "In Good Company," "Spartan," "State and Main," "Lovely & Amazing," "The Human Stain," "We Were Soldiers," "One Hour Photo" and "Magnolia." He played the role of Hank/Henrietta in Tod Williams' debut feature, "The Adventures of Sebastian Cole," for which he received an Independent Spirit Award nomination. Beginning with "Iron Man" in 2008, Gregg has played the role of Agent Phil Coulson in the Marvel Cinematic Universe, which he has reprised in "Iron Man 2," "Thor," "Marvel's The Avengers," and ABC's "Marvel's Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D."

Gregg has also been seen in several other films, including Joss Whedon's "Much Ado About Nothing," CBS Films' "The To Do List," "Very Good Girls," with Dakota Fanning, Jason Reitman's "Labor Day," with Kate Winslet and Josh Brolin, and Ben Affleck's "Live by Night," with Elle Fanning and Brendan Gleeson. On television, he has had recurring roles on "The West Wing," "Sports Night," "Will & Grace," "Sex and the City" and "The Shield," and co-starred with Julia Louis-Dreyfus on CBS' "The New Adventures of Old Christine."

An experienced screenwriter and director, Gregg's screenwriting debut, "What Lies Beneath" (DreamWorks), starred Harrison Ford and Michelle Pfeiffer and was directed by Robert Zemeckis. His feature film directing debut, "Choke," which he adapted from the novel by Chuck Palahniuk, starred Sam Rockwell and Anjelica Huston, and premiered at the 2008 Sundance Film Festival, where it was awarded a Special Jury Prize for best ensemble before being acquired by Fox Searchlight. His second film as writer-director, the dark indie comedy "Trust Me," starred Gregg along with Sam Rockwell, Allison Janney, Felicity Huffman, William H. Macy and Amanda Peet. The film premiered at the 2013 Tribeca Film Festival and was released in May 2014.

Two-time Academy Award® nominee and BAFTA Award winner JUDE LAW (Yon-Rogg) is one of the most sought-after talents in the acting world, winning awards for both his screen and theater work. Law was most recently seen in J.K. Rowling's "Fantastic Beasts: The Crimes of Grindelwald," in which he takes on the much-loved role of Albus Dumbledore, playing the professor in his younger years. With returning cast members Eddie Redmayne, Katherine Waterston, Alison Sudol and Dan Fogler, and David Yates at the helm as director, the much-anticipated sequel released on November 16, 2018.

Recently Law was seen in Brady Corbet's musical drama "Vox Lux," alongside Natalie Portman and Stacy Martin. The film premiered at the Venice International Film Festival, followed by its showing at the Toronto International Film Festival. He also recently filmed the spy thriller "The Rhythm Section," alongside Blake Lively. Directed by Reed Morano and produced by Barbara Broccoli and Michael G. Wilson, the film is a contemporary adaptation of Mark Burnell's "Stephanie Patrick" novels. It is slated for release on February 22, 2019.

He recently wrapped "The Nest," alongside Carrie Coon, and is also starring opposite John Malkovich in the HBO miniseries "The New Pope," the follow-up to Paolo Sorrentino's "The Young Pope."

Law returned to the Barbican in April 2017 in a stage version of "Obsession," adapted from the 1943 film by neo-realist director Luchino Visconti. The adaptation was directed by acclaimed Olivier Award-winning Belgian director Ivo van Hove.

Premiering at the Venice International Film Festival in 2016, the HBO miniseries "The Young Pope" saw Law starring alongside Diane Keaton. The miniseries was created and directed by Paolo Sorrentino. In the 10-part series, Law played Pope Pius XIII, the newly elected pope struggling with new responsibilities. That year Law also starred in Guy Ritchie's "King Arthur: Legend of the Sword," a film adaptation of the classic story where he played Vortigern.

Working with prolific director Michael Grandage for a second time, Law was seen in 2016 in "Genius," alongside Colin Firth, Nicole Kidman and Laura Linney. Recent projects include Paul Feig's comedy "Spy," with Melissa McCarthy, Rose Byrne and Jason Statham. He played the lead role in Kevin Macdonald's submarine drama "Black Sea" and featured in the award-winning "The Grand Budapest Hotel," directed by Wes Anderson. Prior to this, he played Karenin in Joe Wright's "Anna Karenina" and starred in Steven Soderbergh's highly acclaimed film "Side Effects," alongside Rooney Mara and Catherine Zeta-Jones.

For his early performance as Bosie in the film "Wilde," opposite Stephen Fry and Vanessa Redgrave, he won a London Film Critics' Circle Award and an Evening Standard Award. His American film debut was in the futuristic "Gattaca," opposite Uma Thurman and Ethan Hawke.

It was Law's performance as the charming Dickie Greenleaf in the late Anthony Minghella's "The Talented Mr. Ripley" that brought him to the attention of a worldwide audience and garnered him his first Academy Award® and Golden Globe® nominations, for best supporting actor. He won a BAFTA Award for the role. He worked with Minghella in two other films: "Cold Mountain," for which he was again nominated for Golden Globe and Academy Awards, this time as best actor, and the small-scale and intimate "Breaking and Entering."

Other films include Sam Mendes' "Road to Perdition," David Cronenberg's "Existenz," Clint Eastwood's "Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil," Jean-Jacques Annaud's World War II epic "Enemy at the Gates" and Mike Nichols' "Closer," based on the original play by Patrick Marber, opposite Julia Roberts, Clive Owen and Natalie Portman. He starred in "Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow" with Gwyneth Paltrow, and played "Alfie" for director Charles Shyer. In addition, Law played supporting roles as Errol Flynn in Martin Scorsese's Oscar®-nominated epic "The Aviator," and in "I Heart Huckabees," directed by David O. Russell. He starred with Sean Penn in "All the King's Men" and with Cameron Diaz in "The Holiday." In 2007, he produced and starred in "Sleuth" with Michael Caine, directed by Kenneth Branagh and scripted by Harold Pinter, and in 2008 he starred with Norah Jones in Wong Kar Wai's first English-language film, "My Blueberry Nights." Also in 2008, he completed work on "Repo Men," a futuristic thriller in which he starred with Forest Whitaker for director Miguel Sapochnik. He stepped into the late Heath Ledger's role in Terry Gilliam's "The Imaginarium of Dr. Parnassus," a role he shared with Johnny Depp and Colin Farrell.

Law played a telling cameo as a cross-dressing model in Sally Potter's film "Rage," which premiered at the Berlin International Film Festival in 2009, and had huge success as Dr. Watson in Guy Ritchie's two "Sherlock Holmes" films, starring Robert Downey Jr. as Sherlock Holmes. He will reprise his role for a third installment of the film series. He also featured in Martin Scorsese's "Hugo" and in 2011 appeared in Steven Soderbergh's "Contagion," Fernando Meirelles' "360" and voiced a role in the DreamWorks animation "Rise of the Guardians."

Law's theater work has also been highly regarded, most recently in Michael Grandage's "Henry V," for which Law received huge critical acclaim. In 1994, he created the role of Michael in Jean Cocteau's play "Les Parents Terribles," for which he was nominated for the Ian Charleson Award for Outstanding Newcomer. The play was renamed "Indiscretions" when it moved to Broadway and where he received a Tony® nomination for outstanding supporting actor.

He has worked with director David Lan at London's Young Vic Theatre, where he starred in "'Tis Pity She's a Whore" and also starred in Christopher Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" in a highly acclaimed performance. In 2005-2006, Law was closely involved in the fund-raising efforts for the major refurbishment of the Young Vic Theatre. In 2009, he took on "Hamlet" for the Donmar Theatre's season in the West End, directed by Michael Grandage. The production, and his performance, were critically acclaimed and the play transferred to Broadway in September 2009 where it broke box-office records for a production of Shakespeare. In February 2010, Law won the London Critics' Circle Award for the best Shakespearean performance and was nominated for both an Olivier and a Tony Award® as best actor. In 2011, Law returned to the stage at the Donmar Theatre in Eugene O'Neill's "Anna Christie" and received rave reviews.

In 2007, Law was awarded the prestigious French Chevalier des Arts et des Lettres medal and in the same year won a César Award for his contribution to cinema. In 2012, he received the prestigious Variety Award at the British Independent Film Awards. He is an ambassador for the charity Peace One Day.

ABOUT THE FILMMAKERS

ANNA BODEN & RYAN FLECK (Director/Story by/Screenplay by) met on the set of a student film when Boden was studying film at Columbia University and Fleck was a student at New York University film school. Together they began their collaborations with the documentary "Young Rebels."

In 2006 Fleck and Boden wrote, and Fleck directed, the feature film "Half Nelson," starring Ryan Gosling, who was nominated for an Academy Award® for his performance. The film also won movie of the year at the AFI Awards, with Boden and Fleck being nominated for an Independent Spirit Award for best screenplay as well as Fleck winning best director at several regional awards, including the Gotham Awards, Boston Society of Film Critics Awards, New York Film Critics Circle Awards and the Philadelphia Film Festival.

Boden and Fleck followed the film by writing and directing the independent film "Sugar," which was an introspective sports drama that followed the life of a talented Dominican baseball player. The film won movie of the year at the AFI Awards and received critical praise.

In 2010, Boden and Fleck wrote and directed the film “It’s Kind of a Funny Story,” starring Keir Gilchrist, Lauren Graham, Zach Galifianakis and Zoë Kravitz. They followed the film by writing and directing the road movie “Mississippi Grind,” starring Ben Mendelsohn, Ryan Reynolds and Sienna Miller.

On television, Boden and Fleck have directed episodes of HBO’s “Room 104,” Showtime’s “Billions,” “The Affair” and “The Big C.” Fleck has also directed three episodes of “Looking.”

GENEVA ROBERTSON-DWORET (Story by/Screenplay by) is one of the industry’s leading female genre writers, having written for Marvel, DC and other major franchises such as “Tomb Raider,” “Sherlock Holmes,” “Transformers” and “Dungeons & Dragons.”

She is currently adapting “Artemis,” Andy Weir’s follow-up to “The Martian,” with Phil Lord and Chris Miller directing. Her work has twice appeared on the Black List (the annual list of the best unproduced scripts), most recently for “Ares” (produced by Dan Lin).

Last year, Robertson-Dworet launched the production company Known Universe with fellow top genre writers Nicole Perlman and Lindsey Beer. The female-led production company’s mission is to break boundaries for female genre writers and other diverse voices.

NICOLE PERLMAN (Story by) is best known for having co-written Marvel Studios’ 2014 blockbuster “Guardians of the Galaxy.” After graduating from NYU’s Tisch School of the Arts in 2003, Perlman was featured as one of Variety’s 10 Screenwriters to Watch, named one of The Playlist’s Ten Screenwriters on the Rise, and placed on the Black List.

Since then, Perlman has gone on to win the Tribeca Film Festival’s Sloan Foundation Grant for Science in Film, a Hugo Award and the Ray Bradbury Award for Outstanding Dramatic Presentation.

Perlman recently stepped behind the camera as part of a Cinereach Directing Fellowship. Her short science-fiction film, “The Slows,” premiered in October at the New York Film Festival and at Fantastic Fest in September.

Perlman is proud to serve as a Creative Adviser for both the Sundance Institute’s Story Labs and SFFILM.

Nominated for a best screenplay Oscar® for the Pixar blockbuster “Inside Out,” MEG LEFAUVE (Story by) won an Annie Award for that screenplay. She also wrote Pixar’s Golden Globe®-nominated “The Good Dinosaur.” LeFauve is currently writing a series for Hulu and the animated film “My Father’s Dragon” for Netflix and Cartoon Saloon.

LeFauve began her film career as a producer and president of Egg Pictures, Jodie Foster’s film company. During that time, LeFauve produced films that were nominated for an Emmy® and a Golden Globe®, and she was awarded a Peabody for the Showtime film “The Baby Dance.” LeFauve also produced “The Dangerous Lives of Altar Boys,” which won the 2003 IFP Spirit Award for best first feature.

LeFauve has been a consultant to Screen New South Wales and Screen Australia and has been a mentor at many writing labs, including CineStory Script Sessions, the Meryl Streep lab and the Sundance Creative Producing Lab. LeFauve taught at AFI and served as co-chair of the Graduate Producers Program at UCLA’s School of Film and Television, where she taught master-level story and development classes for over seven years.

Raised in Warren, Ohio, LeFauve graduated from the Syracuse University Newhouse School and currently lives in Studio City, California, with her husband and two sons.

KEVIN FEIGE (Producer) has been the driving creative force behind several billion-dollar franchises and an unprecedented number of blockbuster feature films, all connected to create the Marvel Cinematic Universe. In his current role as producer and president of Marvel Studios, Feige is a hands-on producer and oversees Marvel Studios' feature film productions, whose 20 films released have all opened No. 1 at the box office and collectively grossed over $17 billion worldwide. Six of the MCU films have crossed the $1 billion threshold at the global box office.

Feige has been recently honored with two awards for his achievements as a producer: The 2019 David O. Selznick Achievement Award from the Producers Guild of America® and the Albert R. Broccoli Britannia Award for Worldwide Contribution to Entertainment from BAFTA (British Academy Film Awards).

Most recently, Feige produced "Ant-Man and The Wasp," which opened on July 6, 2018, and took the No. 1 spot for the domestic weekend box office with over $75 million, and in its first 30 days in release garnered over $426 million worldwide.

On April 27, 2018, "Avengers: Infinity War" opened and broke box-office records with $250 million domestically and $630 million worldwide in its opening weekend. Eleven days after release, the film crossed the $1 billion mark worldwide, breaking the record for the shortest time to reach $1 billion in box-office receipts. The film's worldwide box office exceeds $2 billion to date, making it the highest-grossing Marvel Studios film thus far.

In February of 2018, Feige also produced "Black Panther," which continued Marvel's unprecedented success. The blockbuster film recorded the fifth biggest opening weekend of all time with $202 million and has grossed over $1.3 billion worldwide to date. In January, "Black Panther" picked up seven Oscar® nominations, including Best Picture. It was also announced that "Black Panther" won the SAG® (Screen Actors Guild) Outstanding Performance by a Cast in a Motion Picture Award.

In 2017, Feige produced "Thor: Ragnarok," which was released on November 3 in the U.S. and grossed $121 million domestically in its opening weekend, in addition to $306 million internationally; "Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2," which opened on May 5 with $145 million and has grossed over $863.5 million worldwide; and "Spider-Man: Homecoming," which opened on July 7 and has garnered over $879 million worldwide to date. Feige is currently producing "Captain Marvel" and "Avengers: Endgame," the fourth installment of the "Avengers" series.

In 2016, Feige launched another franchise with "Doctor Strange," which continued the streak of No. 1 openings, and produced "Captain America: Civil War," the highest-grossing film of 2016 worldwide. In 2015, he launched another successful franchise with "Ant-Man," starring Paul Rudd, and earlier that year he produced "Avengers: Age of Ultron," the fourth-largest domestic opening weekend of all time. In 2014, Feige produced "Guardians of the Galaxy," starring Chris Pratt, which grossed over $773 million worldwide, and "Captain America: The Winter Soldier," which broke the opening record for an April release.

In 2013, Feige produced the megahits "Thor: The Dark World" and "Iron Man 3." In 2012, Feige produced the critically acclaimed "Marvel's The Avengers," which set an all-time domestic three-day-weekend box-office record. The film went on to become Disney's highest-grossing global and domestic release at the time.

In 2011, Feige produced and successfully launched two Marvel film franchises—“Captain America: The First Avenger,” directed by Joe Johnston and starring Chris Evans, and “Thor,” directed by Kenneth Branagh and starring Chris Hemsworth. In 2010, Feige produced “Iron Man 2,” directed by Jon Favreau and starring Robert Downey Jr. and Gwyneth Paltrow.

In summer 2008, Feige produced the first fully developed and financed films from the new Marvel Studios, including the blockbusters “Iron Man,” directed by Jon Favreau, and “The Incredible Hulk,” directed by Louis Leterrier.

Feige joined Marvel in 2000 and served as executive producer on the second and third “Spider-Man” films, which took in combined worldwide box-office receipts of well over $1.5 billion. Feige also co-produced “X-Men 2,” the second installment of the popular “X-Men” franchise, and executive produced “X-Men: The Last Stand,” among many other Marvel-branded films.

A graduate of the University of Southern California, School of Cinematic Arts, Feige first worked for Lauren Shuler Donner and Richard Donner at their Warner Bros.–based production company, which released the action-adventure “Volcano” and the hit romantic comedy “You’ve Got Mail.” Feige earned his first producer credit on “X-Men,” a film that is credited with revitalizing the comic-book genre.

LOUIS D’ESPOSITO (Executive Producer) is co-president of Marvel Studios. He served as executive producer on the blockbuster hits “Iron Man,” “Iron Man 2,” “Thor,” “Captain America: The First Avenger,” “Marvel’s The Avengers,” “Captain America: The Winter Soldier,” “Iron Man 3,” “Thor: The Dark World,” “Avengers: Age of Ultron,” “Ant-Man,” “Captain America: Civil War,” “Doctor Strange,” “Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2,” “Spider-Man: Homecoming” and, most recently, “Thor: Ragnarok,” “Black Panther,” “Avengers: Infinity War” and “Ant-Man and The Wasp.” He is also working with Marvel Studios’ president Kevin Feige on the future Marvel slate that includes, among others, “Spider-Man: Far From Home” and “Black Widow.”

As co-president of the studio and executive producer on all Marvel films, D’Esposito balances running the studio with overseeing each film from its development stage to distribution.

In addition to executive producing Marvel Studios’ films, D’Esposito directed the Marvel One-Shot film “Item 47,” which made its debut to fans at the 2012 Comic-Con International in San Diego and was featured again at the LA Shorts Fest in September 2012. The project was released as an added feature on the “Marvel’s The Avengers” Blu-ray disc. With the success of “Item 47,” D’Esposito directed the second Marvel One-Shot, “Agent Carter,” starring Hayley Atwell, which premiered at the 2013 Comic-Con to critical praise from the press and fans. The project is also an added feature on the “Iron Man 3” Blu-ray disc.

D’Esposito began his tenure at Marvel Studios in 2006. Prior to Marvel, D’Esposito’s executive-producing credits included the 2006 hit film “The Pursuit of Happyness,” starring Will Smith; “Zathura: A Space Adventure”; and the 2003 hit “S.W.A.T.,” starring Samuel L. Jackson and Colin Farrell.

VICTORIA ALONSO (Executive Producer) currently serves as EVP, Physical Production, for Marvel Studios, one of the very few women in Hollywood to hold such a title. Over the years, Alonso’s dedication to the industry has been admired and her achievements recognized. In 2015, she was an honoree of the New York Women in Film & Television’s Muse Award for Outstanding Vision and Achievement. She was also the first woman to be presented with the Harold Lloyd Award from the Advanced Imaging Society, which is given to a filmmaker who has created a body of work, and specific achievements in 3D, that advanced the motion picture art form. In 2017, she was the first woman to be honored with the Visionary Award at the 15th Annual VES Awards for her advancement of unforgettable storytelling through visual effects.

A native of Buenos Aires, Alonso began her industry career in visual effects (first in commercials, then features), including a four-year stint at Digital Domain. She served as VFX producer on a handful of films, notably Ridley Scott's "Kingdom of Heaven," Tim Burton's "Big Fish," Andrew Adamson and Vicky Jenson's "Shrek" and Marvel's own "Iron Man." She won the Visual Effects Society (VES) Award for outstanding supporting visual effects/motion picture for "Kingdom of Heaven," with two additional shared nominations (best single visual effects, outstanding visual effects/effects driven motion picture) for "Iron Man."

Upon joining Marvel as the company's executive vice president of visual effects and post production, Alonso doubled as co-producer on "Iron Man," a role she reprised on "Iron Man 2," "Thor" and "Captain America: The First Avenger." She graduated to executive producer on 2012's "Marvel's The Avengers" and has since executive produced Marvel's "Iron Man 3," "Captain America: The Winter Soldier" and "Captain America: Civil War," "Thor: The Dark World," "Avengers: Age of Ultron," "Ant-Man," "Guardians of the Galaxy," "Doctor Strange," "Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2," "Spider-Man: Homecoming," "Thor: Ragnarok," "Black Panther," "Avengers: Infinity War," and "Ant-Man and The Wasp."

Currently, Alonso is working on "Spider-Man: Far From Home." Alonso has been listed in The Hollywood Reporter's Women in Entertainment Power 100 in both 2017 and 2018.

Before his work on "Captain Marvel," JONATHAN SCHWARTZ (Executive Producer) helped launch the "Guardians of the Galaxy" franchise as co-producer of the first film and executive producer of "Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2." Alongside his colleagues in Marvel Studios' Parliament, Schwartz is responsible for creative oversight of the studio's slate. He began his career at Marvel as Kevin Feige's assistant on "Iron Man 2," "Thor" and "Captain America: The First Avenger" and served as creative executive on "Marvel's The Avengers."

Schwartz was named to The Hollywood Reporter's Next Gen list in 2016 and was one of Variety's New Leaders in 2015. He recently celebrated his 10th year at Marvel Studios.

Schwartz is an alumnus of Pomona College.

PATRICIA WHITCHER (Executive Producer) has most recently served as an executive producer on "Spider-Man: Homecoming," "Captain America: Civil War," "Avengers: Age of Ultron," "Godzilla," "Marvel's The Avengers" and "Thor."

Before entering the Marvel Cinematic Universe, Whitcher was an executive producer on "The Soloist," the real-life drama filmed on L.A.'s skid row and onstage at Walt Disney Concert Hall in 2008. Adapted from newspaper articles written by Los Angeles Times columnist Steve Lopez, the film starred Robert Downey Jr. and Jamie Foxx.

In 2006, Whitcher was executive producer of the film adaptation of the Broadway musical "Dreamgirls," starring Jamie Foxx, Beyoncé Knowles, Eddie Murphy and Jennifer Hudson. Directed by Bill Condon, "Dreamgirls" won two Academy Awards® (for Hudson and for sound mixing) and earned eight nominations. "Memoirs of a Geisha," which Whitcher executive produced in 2005 for director Rob Marshall, was another big Oscar® contender with six nominations and three wins (art direction, cinematography and costume design).

Whitcher previously executive produced Steven Spielberg's dramatic comedy "The Terminal," starring Tom Hanks and Catherine Zeta-Jones. Her producing credits also include Brad Silberling's "Moonlight Mile," starring Dustin Hoffman and Susan Sarandon; "Where the Heart Is," starring Natalie Portman and Ashley Judd; and P.J. Hogan's smash hit "My Best Friend's Wedding," starring Julia Roberts and Cameron Diaz. Additional producing credits include "How to Make an American Quilt," "High School High" and "A Dangerous Woman."

In September 2018, Whitcher took on a new role as VP of Physical Production for Original Films at Netflix. A lifelong Los Angeles resident, she is the mother of two children and a graduate of Loyola Marymount University.

STAN LEE (Executive Producer) was the founder of POW! Entertainment and served as its chairman and chief creative officer since its inception. Known to millions as the man whose superheroes propelled Marvel to its preeminent position in the comic-book industry, the late Stan Lee's co-creations include Spider-Man, the Incredible Hulk, X-Men, the Fantastic Four, Iron Man, Daredevil, Silver Surfer and Doctor Strange.

Having achieved the title of chairman emeritus of Marvel Media, Lee first became publisher of Marvel Comics in 1972. He was recognized as the creative force that brought Marvel to the forefront of the comics publishing industry. In 1977, he introduced Spider-Man as a syndicated newspaper strip that became the most successful of all syndicated adventure strips and now appears in more than 500 newspapers worldwide—making it the longest running of all superhero strips.

From June 2001 until the formal creation of POW! in November 2001, Lee worked to form POW! and to create intellectual property for POW! and start the development of various POW! projects.

BEN DAVIS, BSC (Director of Photography) has a roster of recent film credits that include the Academy Award®-winning film "Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri," Marvel Studios' "Doctor Strange," "Avengers: Age of Ultron" and "Guardians of the Galaxy," and Michael Grandage's "Genius."

Davis' prior credits include Martin McDonagh's "Seven Psychopaths," starring Sam Rockwell, Christopher Walken, Woody Harrelson and Colin Farrell; Dan Mazer's "I Give It a Year"; Pascal Chaumeil's "A Long Way Down"; and Rowan Joffe's "Before I Go to Sleep," starring Nicole Kidman and Colin Firth. He also worked on Jonathan Liebesman's "Wrath of the Titans," John Madden's "The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel" and "The Debt," Mikael Håfström's "The Rite," Stephen Frears' "Tamara Drewe," Gerald McMorrow's "Franklyn," Sharon Maguire's "Incendary" and Peter Webber's "Hannibal Rising."

Davis has collaborated extensively with director Matthew Vaughn on "Layer Cake," "Stardust" and "Kick-Ass." Davis' work can also be seen in the short film "The Tonto Woman," which received an Academy Award® nomination in 2008 for best live action short film.

ANDY NICHOLSON's (Production Designer) most notable collaboration has been with director Alfonso Cuarón on "Gravity," for which he received Oscar® and British Academy of Film and Television Arts (BAFTA) Film Award nominations for production design and won the Art Directors Guild (ADG) Award for excellence in production design.

Nicholson most recently served as the production designer on "Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom" and Justin Kurzel's "Assassin's Creed." Other film credits include Neil Burger's "Divergent" and Andrew Niccol's "The Host."

Nicholson has worked several times with director Tim Burton, starting in 1999 as an art director on “Sleepy Hollow,” for which he won an ADG Award. He earned another ADG Award nomination for his work as an art director on Burton’s “Charlie and the Chocolate Factory,” and has since collaborated with the director as a supervising art director on “Alice in Wonderland” and as a visual development art director on “Frankenweenie.”

Nicholson won another ADG Award for his work on Chris Weitz’s “The Golden Compass” and received ADG Award nominations for Paul Greengrass’ “The Bourne Ultimatum” and Marvel Studios’ “Captain America: The First Avenger.”

His credits as a supervising art director also include Joe Johnston’s “The Wolfman,” Guy Ritchie’s “RocknRolla,” Nancy Meyers’ “The Holiday” and Anthony Minghella’s “Breaking and Entering.” His additional art direction credits include Tony Scott’s “Spy Game,” Wolfgang Petersen’s “Troy” and Neil Jordan’s “The Good Thief.”

ELLIOT GRAHAM (Editor) is an Academy Award®-nominated editor for his work on Gus Van Sant’s film “Milk.” Most recently Graham edited the films “Molly’s Game,” “Steve Jobs,” “Trash” and “The Amazing Spider-Man 2.”

His previous credits include “Restless,” “21,” “Superman Returns,” “The Greatest Game Ever Played,” “X-Men 2” and “The Last Minute.”

DEBBIE BERMAN (Editor) began her career in her native South Africa and has worked on films and television shows such as Marvel Studios’ “Black Panther” and “Spider-Man: Homecoming,” “Invictus,” “Space Chimps,” “The Final Girls,” “Timeless,” “Mad Dogs,” “The Jesuit” and “The United.”

Marvel Studios’ “Captain Marvel” is SANJA MILKOVIC HAYS’ (Costume Designer) first foray into the Marvel Cinematic Universe. She was born and raised in Zagreb, Croatia, and eventually received a degree in architecture after graduating from the University of Zagreb. She started her career at Zagreb’s Jadran Studios, where she worked as an assistant for several costume designers who hailed from America, England and Italy.

Hays moved to Los Angeles in 1987 where she continued to work as an assistant costume designer on “Stargate” and “Independence Day,” and as a costume designer on several indie movies. She got her big break when she got the opportunity to design costumes for “Blade” and subsequently “Star Trek: Insurrection.”

Since then, she has worked with directors who include Brian De Palma, Tim Story and John Singleton. She has also collaborated several times with Lee Tamahori in both “Along Came a Spider” and “XXX: State of the Union”; with Rob Cohen in “The Fast and the Furious,” “XXX” and “The Mummy: The Tomb of the Dragon Emperor”; and with Justin Lin in “The Fast and the Furious: Tokyo Drift,” “Fast & Furious,” “Fast Five” and “Fast & Furious 6.”

She has also ventured into television by working on two successful pilots, Fox’s “Sleepy Hollow” with Len Wiseman and CBS’s “Scorpion,” once again with Justin Lin.

Her most recent projects are “Furious 7” with James Wan, “Star Trek Beyond” with Justin Lin, and both “Maze Runner: The Scorch Trials” and “Maze Runner: The Death Cure” with Wes Ball.

CHRIS TOWNSEND (Visual Effects Supervisor) is an Academy Award®-nominated visual effects supervisor and Marvel Studios film veteran, having served as visual effects supervisor on “Avengers: Age of Ultron,” “Iron Man 3,” “Captain America: The First Avenger,” “X-Men Origins: Wolverine” and, most recently, “Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2.”

His other recent film credits as a visual effects supervisor include “Ninja Assassins” and “Journey to the Center of the Earth.”

Townsend has also worked as a visual artist at ILM on the films “Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man’s Chest,” “The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe,” “A.I. Artificial Intelligence,” “Space Cowboys,” “Deep Impact,” “The Lost World: Jurassic Park,” “Daylight,” “Eraser” and “Congo.”

Award-winner PINAR TOPRAK (Composer) has written music for an impressive number of diverse movies and distinguished filmmakers, with over 40 feature film credits to date. She is currently writing the score for the Superman prequel series “Krypton,” created by David Goyer. She also scored the Netflix original “The Angel,” directed by Ariel Vromen. She recently wrote additional music for Warner Bros.’ “Justice League” with renowned composer Danny Elfman, as well as scored “Fortnite,” a video game from Epic Games. Among her other scores are the late Michael Clarke Duncan’s last film, “The Challenger”; the Sony film “The River Murders,” starring Ray Liotta and Christian Slater; the period drama “The Lightkeepers”; as well as the 33rd America’s Cup documentary “The Wind Gods,” produced by David Ellison.

She has won two International Film Music Critics Association Awards as well as been nominated for Best Revelation Composer, alongside Trent Reznor and Daft Punk.

Some of her past credits include the action feature film “Behind Enemy Lines II: Axis of Evil” by 20th Century Fox; the crime drama “Breaking Point” from Lionsgate, with Tom Berenger and Busta Rhymes; the animated feature “Light of Olympia,” featuring the voices of Debbie Reynolds and Phyllis Diller; as well as the romantic drama “Say It in Russian,” starring Faye Dunaway and Steven Brand. She has also written music for the Xbox 360 video game “Ninety-Nine Nights,” produced by Microsoft, as well as numerous trailers and commercials. Moreover, she had the privilege to join the Media Ventures team (now known as Remote Control), home of the legendary film composer Hans Zimmer, during projects such as “Pirates of the Caribbean,” “The Last Samurai” and “King Arthur.”

Toprak was born and raised in Istanbul, Turkey, where she began her classical musical education at the age of five. After studying composition and multiple instruments at the conservatory, she moved to Chicago to study jazz, then to Boston for a degree in film scoring from Berklee College of Music. She then went to Los Angeles, earned a master’s degree in composition at age 22, and has quickly become an active and refreshing new voice in the Hollywood community.

DAVE JORDAN (Music Supervisor) is the founder, CEO and creative leader of Format Entertainment.

Jordan began his career in the record industry but soon transitioned to become one of Hollywood’s most sought-after theatrical music supervisors. Jordan’s music supervision credits include some of the most successful film franchises in the world, including “Black Panther,” “Thor,” “Spider-Man,” “Guardians of the Galaxy,” “Iron Man,” “Avengers,” “Transformers” and many more.

In 2001, Jordan founded Format Entertainment as a collaborative workplace for like-minded music supervisors to share ideas, experience and pool resources. The success of this model has allowed Format to grow and evolve into the largest collection of theatrical and television music supervisors working in the industry. Format's spectrum of clients consists of some of the most recognizable names in entertainment, media, advertising and consumer goods, including Marvel Studios, Warner Bros. Consumer Products, Mattel and marquee projects such as "Captain America: Civil War," "Straight Outta Compton," "Empire" and many Barbie and DC Super Hero Girls brand campaigns.

Format's music supervision efforts have yielded several chart-topping albums, including No. 1 spots for the "Guardians of the Galaxy," "Empire" and "Pitch Perfect" soundtracks, and just recently Format soundtracks occupied an unprecedented four of the top five positions on the Billboard charts. Format has won several Guild of Music Supervisors Awards, received multiple Grammy® and Emmy® nominations and twice won the American Music Award for best soundtrack ("Pitch Perfect" and "Alvin and the Chipmunks").

Recognizing a void in the industry and an opportunity he could deliver against, Jordan incorporated an internal music creation business under the Format umbrella. This business is signing exciting new talent while remaining geared toward providing a seamless and efficient experience for the film, television and brand communities, resulting in major placements on shows such as "Better Call Saul," "Girls" and "How to Get Away with Murder" and in campaigns for brands such as BMW, Procter & Gamble and McDonald's.

Jordan and several members of the Format team serve on the board of governors for the Grammy® committee in Los Angeles, contributing to advocacy, education and human services programs to improve the cultural condition and quality of life for music and its makers.
